

Visit to Rome King Fisherman Prize

By ALEC MERRIMAN
Outdoors Editor

The 11th edition of The Daily Colonist King Fisherman Contest opens May 1 and this year's big hidden weight prize will be an expense-paid trip for two to Rome, with a week's holiday in Italy.

Winners will be drawn from all entries after the Oct. 31 end of the contest and will travel to Rome on a luxury Canadian Pacific Airlines jet.

The popular weekend wilderness camping-fishing trip on Vancouver Island with a Vancouver Island Helicopters' whirlybird at the winner's disposal will again be a major hidden weight prize.

A 12-foot aluminum carport boat purchased from Angus

Marine Thorne's boat headquarters will be a third contest-long hidden weight prize.

Last year's New Zealand trip hidden weight winner, 11-year-old Russell Murcheson and his father, Angus, will travel to New Zealand by Canadian Pacific Airlines next week and will be guests of the New Zealand government for 12 days.

Miles and Frances Primrose will take their Vancouver Island Helicopters' trip within the next two or three weeks to the Nimpkish Valley-Sayward Lakes area with headquarters at Campbell River's Rustic Motel. John Ebert will be their fishing guide.

Colonist King Fisherman Contest officials will hit the road this week to distribute posters, weigh-in forms and rule sheets

Freighters Collide

Fire Follows Crash

MONTREAL — (UPI) — The crippled Dutch freighter Hermes limped into port Saturday night with 10 survivors from the West German freighter Transatlantic following a collision of the two ships early Saturday morning.

The 10 crewmen were from the 7,800-ton Transatlantic which was, at last report, still smoldering in Lake St. Peter in the St. Lawrence River, 80 miles downstream from Montreal. (See picture, Page 3.)

One man died in the mishap and another was missing. A third was taken to hospital in Sorel, Que., in critical condition.

KEEP QUIET

When the 5,700-ton Hermes docked, the survivors were spirited away by police and when crewmen attempted to say something to newsmen, they were told to keep their mouths shut by one of the ship's crew.

The captain, Walter Buschan, remained at Yamachiche, Que., near his burning ship.

Plane Crash Kills 52 In Syria

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — A chartered Jordanian airliner crashed in flames into a mountain top 13 miles west of Damascus, Syria, Saturday night killing all 52 persons.

The spokesman for the Belgian embassy in Damascus said the plane was carrying the Belgian party from Beirut, Lebanon, to Jordan for Easter observance in Jerusalem.

Esquimalt Seamen Arrested in Japan

TOKYO (Reuters) — Police arrested three seamen from the two Esquimalt-based Canadian destroyers currently on a goodwill visit to Japan and charged them with attacking a Japanese taxi driver in Yokohama Saturday.

Police identified them as Leon Joseph Kocover, 22, and William Thurnishian, 20, both of the destroyer Saskatchewan, and Richard William Boscma, 20, of the Mackinac.

The three were alleged to have struck the taxi driver with an iron bar and attempted to run away without paying their taxi fare of 250 yen (about 75 cents), police said.

The taxi driver was admitted to hospital with head injuries.

Viet Nam: Quiet Diplomacy

Soviets Want To Help U.S.

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON

LONDON (AP) — Soviet sources are quietly spreading the word in London that their country wants to help the United States end the war in Viet Nam.

Before and after President Johnson's offer for talks, Russian informants have been suggesting that neither Moscow nor Washington wants the Viet Nam war extended. They say both countries recognize that China, if rampant in South-east Asia, could imperil world peace and that something needs to be done to check Peking's position in North Viet Nam.

To achieve these goals, Soviet sources imply, Moscow and Washington must find ways to cooperate. The Johnson peace plan seems to approach such a basis although the Russians seem to think it needs to be revised at least on the National Liberation Front (representing the Viet Cong guerrillas in the south) can be represented at any peace talks.

Still, there are important implications in the Soviet hints, which seem to point toward a Moscow yearning for some sort of tacit understanding between the super-powers to defuse the Southeast Asia situation — and perhaps even contain the Chinese.

This sort of Russian thinking is being outlined in informal contacts on a variety of levels among diplomats, politicians and reporters.

It appears to fit into information reaching key Western governments through the official network of communication with Moscow. A highly placed Soviet diplomat discussing Viet Nam recently with a British colleague remarked in Moscow:

"When fire breaks out firemen don't argue about their duties. In London Russians have been seeking out British acquaintances to amplify their ideas. Nobody familiar with Soviet methods of communication believes all this to be accidental."

Viet Nam: Loud Reaction

Johnson Plan 'Propaganda'

MOSCOW (AP) — Pravda has dismissed President Johnson's offer of peace talks on Viet Nam without prior condition as part of a "noisy propaganda campaign" to continue American aggression there.

In the Kremlin's first official reaction to Johnson's speech in Baltimore, Md., on Wednesday, the Soviet Communist party organ insisted Saturday the President indicated no change of heart in U.S. policy and questioned his offer to negotiate.

Pravda commentator George Ratianni noted that "American propaganda aimed especially at the expression 'unconditional' and accompanied it with the loudest commentary."

"However, official explanations of what in reality were restrictions on these conditions, were not long in coming."

He said the U.S. reply Thursday to a 17-nation appeal for a settlement of the Viet Nam battling insisted on a cessation of Viet Cong attacks as a condition for negotiations.

In his talks at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Johnson offered to join in "unconditional discussions" to halt the fighting and offered $1,000,000,000 for a vast Mekong River basin development program.

No MiGs Met

120 U.S. Warplanes Hit Bridges, Roads

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (AP) — More than 120 U.S. warplanes fanned out over Communist North Viet Nam Saturday, striking at a strategic bridge and highways. Officials said all got back safely after meeting little groundfire and no air challenges from Communist MiGs.

A Viet Cong-South Vietnamese firefight three miles from Da Nang gave 1,400 newly arrived U.S. Marines their first glimpse of the Viet Nam war but they did not become engaged. The ground troops came ashore concurrent with the arrival of the first four of 18 F4 Phantom jets flown by Marine pilots.

BRIDGE KNOCKED OUT

Seventy-five U.S. Navy planes from the carriers Ranger and Coral Sea knocked out the Kim Quang Bridge on North Viet Nam's Route 7, 150 miles south of Hanoi, U.S. officials in Saigon reported.

The Navy planes were over their targets for 30 minutes. In morning and afternoon runs, U.S. Air Force bombers and fighters ranged up and down Highway 7 and 8, about 100 miles north of the South Vietnamese border. A U.S. spokesman said they sprayed a variety of targets, presumably road convoys.

MARINES WATCH
The 1,400 newly arrived Marines stood by trucks and helicopters on Da Nang beach and watched a Vietnamese Ranger company fight in a village against the Viet Cong. There was no noticeable excitement among the Marines.

Sultry Beauty Dies of Burns

CHICAGO (UPI) — Sultry actress Linda Darnell, one of Hollywood's reigning beauties of the 1940s and 1950s, died Saturday of burns received in a heroic attempt to rescue a friend's child in a blazing apartment.

The 43-year-old brunette died in the famed Sumner L. Koeh burn unit of Cook County Hospital. Some of the nation's top burn experts had worked for 33 hours in hopes of saving her life.

BOLLYWOOD AT 15

But burns covered 80 per cent of the body of the Dallas-born actress who came to Hollywood when she was just 15 and went on to star in 50 movies, among them Forever Amber, in which she played the title role.

Little hope had been held out for her life since she was carried early Friday from the charred home of her longtime friend and sometime personal secretary, Mrs. Richard Curtis, in a fashionable section of suburban Glenview.

According to friends of the Curtis family, Miss Darnell died trying to save a teen-age girl who was already safe.

The actress dashed into the burning living room of the Curtis home in the apparent belief that Mrs. Curtis' daughter, Patricia, was there. Patricia had already jumped from a second story window in the same panic below, Miss Darnell was found behind a sofa.

IMPROVED TEMPORARILY

Although she had been listed in "very, very critical" condition, Miss Darnell appeared to show some improvement after she was brought to the Cook County burn unit. Her adopted daughter, Charlotte, 16, visited her and doctors said she was "slightly improved."

The fire broke out a short time after she and Mrs. Curtis sat up and watched the late movie, Star Dust, in which Miss Darnell starred in 1940.

Russia Wants to Help U.S.

"Our country is in a very difficult position."

"While there is fighting in Viet Nam we must remain ready to help our friends in the north to sustain themselves against attack."

SUITS CHINESE

"Naturally this holds up the process of East-West détente which suits the Chinese fine."

"If we do not remain solid with Hanoi then we will be accused of betraying the Communist cause which would suit the Chinese even more."

One Soviet informant related details of the episode in which China supposedly blocked Soviet plans to send massive military aid to North Viet Nam. Despite Peking's denial of the affair, the source insisted this version is accurate.

The story he told: Premier Alexei N. Kosygin visited Hanoi Feb. 6-10 and among other things, arranged for the supply of new, modern anti-aircraft defence weapons—including ground-to-air missiles and aircraft which would have required the presence of Russian advisers, trainers and technicians.

Later in Peking he advised Chinese leaders of the arrangements made in Hanoi and asked for rights of transit across Chinese territory for the Soviet equipment. He seemed so sure that the facilities would be granted that he told a public meeting in the North Korean capital of Pyongyang that American air raids on North Viet Nam had brought Russia and Red China close together.

CHINA MILENT

Kosygin returned to Moscow Feb. 14. Orders went out to assemble the promised equipment and specialist crews.

Around the end of February China still had not granted the necessary overflying rights. Responses to Peking, with cut response.

Early in March Kosygin ordered a note sent to President Ho Chi Minh's Hanoi regime, saying the material and men were ready but were awaiting Chinese transit rights. Nothing happened and a second note went to Hanoi.

REPUDIATION

By about mid-March the North Vietnamese responded in a way that amounted to the informal repudiation of the original agreement. Hanoi's reply said sophisticated weapons no longer were needed. Russia could help best by sending along medical supplies and weapons presumably small arms, that were easy to use. Soviet specialists were not wanted.

VOICE OF PEKING

"The words were the words of Hanoi," commented the Russian source, "but the voice was the voice of Peking."

Toward the end of March officials in Moscow began leaking the story of what they said was Chinese obstructionism.

China on March 31 denied the reports which, by then, had got into print around the world. Russian sources still insist they are true. They suggest China may have wanted to counter any chance that Hanoi would move into Moscow's sphere of influence or that China may have wanted to compel the Russians to transport the arms by sea through the U.S. 7th Fleet.

OBSTACLES FARED:

Last week there have been some reports from Moscow that the Chinese have withdrawn obstacles to passage of Soviet arms shipments to Hanoi. It still has not been disclosed whether Hanoi is maintaining a veto on the presence of Russian specialists in North Viet Nam.

Contest to Open May 1

to more than 200 weigh-in stations.

Fishermen are advised to make sure they have their Colonist subscriptions, since only Colonist subscribers may win the hidden weight and merchandise prizes, although anyone who fishes Vancouver Island and Gulf Island waters may get in on the fun of the contest for prince buttons and trophies.

A new trophy this contest edition will be the Fish-of-the-Year Trophy for the outstanding fish weighed in, as selected by a panel of judges comprising provincial museum biologist Charles Guignot, regional fish biologist David Hurn and Duncan's Bucky Kennett.

The biggest fish in any of the six categories need not necessarily be the winner, although last year's 13.8-pound type caught by the late Patricia Houghton would almost certainly have captured the trophy.

An unusually large bass, steelhead or coho, or a big spring trout, or some fish caught on ultra-light tackle or under difficult conditions.

Anyone who thinks he has a contender for the Fish-of-the-Year Trophy is asked to send in full particulars of the catch, along with a picture, so that each possible winner can be considered by the judges.

The trophy replaces the Complete Angler award, which was for the first person to win all six Prince Buttons.

There will again be six categories with trophies for biggest fish in each category along with a merchandise prize for the Colonist subscriber with biggest fish.

For Lake Trout, Jeune Bros. will donate a family camping tent; for River Trout, Jeune Bros. will donate Steelhead GP chest waders, Plarex water-proofs, Pioneer insulated underwear; for biggest Smallmouth Bass Imperial Oil will donate a prize valued at $100; for biggest Tyee Colwood Pharmacy Ltd. will donate a zoom lens moving picture camera.

T. Eaton Co. will donate a three-horsepower Viking outboard motor for biggest coho and W. R. Menzies a Tappan food waste disposer for heaviest Spring salmon.

King Fisherman Buttons will be awarded each for the 25 heaviest spring salmon, 25 heaviest type, 15 heaviest bass, 15 heaviest lake trout, 15 heaviest river trout, with one gold button and five others in the river trout division reserved for trout other than steelhead and rainbow.

Heaviest fish in each category each month will win a gold Prince Button. Except for gold buttons, anglers may win only one button in each division.

There will be hidden weight prizes each month for Colonist subscribers.

The contest is open to all anglers, resident and non-resident, who fish in Vancouver Island and Gulf Island waters, except professional guides and holders of commercial fishing licences.

Positive identification with picture are required for prize-contending coho.

With an expected good run of pink (humpback) salmon in Sooke to Oak Bay waters this summer, it is pointed out that pinks may be entered in the spring salmon division and quality for hidden weight prizes, but it would be appreciated if anglers mark the entry as pink salmon to help in contest catch tabulations.

Blackheads Not Walnuts —If You Pinch, Be Gentle

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: Is it safe to pinch blackheads and pimples to the face? I have heard both pro and con, even from doctors. someone else said blackheads, yes, pimples, no.

For several months I have had a large blackhead right under my eye, and I've been afraid to touch it. Should I pinch it myself, or consult a skin specialist? MRS. J. R. M.

Unfortunately, too many people pinch blackheads as though they were trying to crack a walnut or something. Skin can easily be injured—and skin injuries make it easy for infections to start.

Hence people who pinch blackheads often have pimples (a small infection) or infected skin glands following the procedure.

SPECIAL GADGET

The important thing is to remove blackheads gently. Use a comedone remover (comedones being a technical word for blackheads). This inexpensive little gadget will help you press the comedones out gently without pinching the skin and tearing the tissues.

If the blackhead below your eye is inside the circle of bone which outlines the socket, I'd suggest that you not touch it. If it is outside the eye socket circle (on the cheekbone, for example) you may be able to remove it yourself. But gently!

BE CAREFUL

Generally speaking it's best not to stir up pimples. A pimple (as opposed to a blackhead or whitehead) indicates that an area of infection has developed but the body's defences are bringing it under control. (Otherwise it would be inflamed.) So leave it alone and nature will get rid of it.

Be especially careful of removing blackheads on the upper lip and near the edges of the nostrils. Infections can spread readily from there, via the blood stream. In addition, the nose is notorious for harboring the staphylococcus germ, which is responsible for so many skin (and other) infections.

Dear Dr. Molner: I am 30 and troubled with a very unsightly head. It is difficult for me to drink soup from a spoon. I have business friends who are ashamed to go and get a shock treatment and claim this benefits them greatly. Might this help me? —L. D.

At 30, I would let my doctor decide what is best for that tremor. I am not sure what type of "shock treatment" your friends had in mind. In any event treatment depends on the type and cause of the unsteadiness.

NOTE TO MRS. J. J. G.: If two aspirins at bedtime help you sleep, there's no reason why you shouldn't take them.

Reds Avoid Showdown

Autobahn Reopened
For U.S. Convoys

By JOHN O. KOENIGER
BERLIN (AP) — The Communists abruptly ended East German military manoeuvres Saturday and reopened the Berlin autobahn, thus avoiding a showdown on access rights with four big U.S. convoys.

The Russians earlier had said the manoeuvres would end Sunday and off-again-on-again shut-downs on the autobahn would continue until then. So the United States assembled the convoys for a challenge at 6:45 a.m. but the Russians waved the convoy through.

FIELD TRAINING
Authoritative sources said the convoys of 450 men and 100 vehicles were originally to have returned to Berlin Monday after three weeks of field training in West Germany. In the convoys was the 4th Battalion of the 18th Infantry Regiment.

The speedup of the convoys' return made it appear the United States was determined to put its rights of free access to West Berlin to another test. Six times since Monday the Communists had closed the autobahn, the 110-mile lifeline for West Berlin. They announced it was because of the military manoeuvres. But privately they said it was because of the West German Parliament meeting in West Berlin last Wednesday.

Rain God
At Work

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Former President Miguel Alemán of Mexico presented this city with a gift March 22—a three-foot statue of the ancient Aztec rain god Tlaltec.

True to legend, rain began the next week.
Saturday—18 days later—it was still raining. With only 10 days of the month gone, it was already the second rainiest April in the history of Los Angeles.

Fire Rages
In Cannery

KETCHIKAN (UPI) — A fire which officials already estimate has caused $1,000,000 in damage was blazing here Saturday night at the largest fish cannery in southeast Alaska.

Fireboats and fire crews from Ketchikan and adjoining communities were trying to bring the fire under control.

Johnson Proposal

Hanoi, Peking Reaction
Disappointing to U.S.

By LEWIS GULICK
WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk voiced official U.S. disappointment Saturday at Red rebuff of President Johnson's offer to discuss peace for Southeast Asia.

Washington authorities said the final verdict is not yet in on whether the Communists will agree to the unconditional Viet Nam peace talks and the massive economic development program proposed by the president last Wednesday.

But with first Peking and now Hanoi radios heaping public abuse on Johnson's offer, chances of formal Communist acceptance appeared to be dimming.

"Quite frankly I have been disappointed with the response so far," Rusk said when asked about the Chinese and North Vietnamese reaction. Peking radio has denounced the U.S. offer as a trick to hide imperialist U.S. aims in Viet Nam. A "deceitful peace allegation," said Radio Hanoi.

JUST RETURNED

Returning from a week's trip to the Middle East, the secretary of state told reporters that he had not had a chance yet to examine the actual language of the Chinese-North Vietnamese responses and that the two may have been repeating past criticisms of U.S. actions rather than directly rejecting the Johnson offer.

But he added, "The reactions I have seen are disappointing because there could be peace in Southeast Asia literally overnight, if these people would respect the needs of Southeast Asia for peace and open the way to the great tasks that lie ahead for the people of Southeast Asia."

QUEBEC (CP) — The Dorion judicial inquiry which began Dec. 15, ended Saturday. Chief Justice Frederic Dorion wound up hearings with special thanks to the more than 20 lawyers who participated and a statement that he now would begin the final stage of his "difficult and delicate task."

He gave no indication when he will report to the federal cabinet on his probe of corruption allegations against officials high in the Liberal government.

WHAT IS CANCER?

Cancer cells are either normal cells which go berserk and take on criminal characteristics, or abnormal offspring of apparently normal cells which multiply in the growth of a certain body tissue or in repair after some irritation or injury. When more is known about the cause of cancer, the possibility of a cure or cures will loom large. Your support of the Canadian Cancer Society campaign for funds will pay for the research which will bring this about.

Police Manhunt Combs Okanagan

KELOWNA (CP) — A wide-spread police manhunt continued in the Okanagan area of British Columbia today for a gunman police said was responsible for the wounding of a policeman and a young girl.

In hospital is RCMP Const. Neil Bruce, who was shot through the lung and Beverly Charest, 17, who was shot twice, once in the shoulder and again in the jaw. Both are said to be in satisfactory condition. RCMP said the story began in a one-room cabin built of unpainted lumber where they had a report that a girl was being held against her will.

SERVED TIME

The cabin—at Westbank, located west of Kelowna — was occupied by a man who police said had served two years in the B.C. Penitentiary on a common assault conviction, being released in March of last year.

Sgt. Russell Bakewell, head of the Kelowna RCMP detachment, said two constables paid a visit to the cabin to investigate a complaint that a young girl was being held against her will. One of the policemen—Const. Neil Bruce—was shot in the chest when he was only 15 feet from the cabin.

THREE SHOTS

His companion—Const. Kenneth Jones—said three shots were fired from the cabin, and that Bruce fired two shots at dogs which attacked him as he fell behind a haystack.

Jones said that a few minutes later, a girl ran from the cabin shouting that she had been shot. She ran up a nearby hill and was driven to hospital by a neighbor.

Forty-five men took part in the search for the gunman, including 10 police officers from Penticton and 10 others from Vernon. Police said the search would continue, and at one time warned motorists to avoid pickup hitchhikers in the West-bank area. Road blocks were set up by Penticton and Summerland RCMP as well as the Kelowna detachment.

Aid to the Enemy

THE FEDERAL government's decision to set up and operate an air force equipment and training program in Tanzania at a cost of $9,000,000 to Canadian taxpayers places this country in the ridiculous if not dangerous position of giving military aid to a state under Communist control.

Though Tanzania remains in the Commonwealth it is no longer a secret that it has become the major centre of Communist activities in East and Central Africa, much to the concern of its neighboring Commonwealth republics of Kenya, Uganda and Malawi as well as the governments of Britain and the United States.

In the past year the East African republic's president, Dr. Nyerere—once considered one of the most moderate of African leaders and devotee of democratic ideals—has had most of his political powers removed and plays the role of little more than a figurehead in a government controlled by his Communist-leaning vice-president Abeid Amani Karume.

Under Karume's leadership Tanzania has established full diplomatic relations with East Germany and Communist China, with the result that the Communist powers are using the republic as their major base of operations for both the dissemination of propaganda and the movement of Communist manufactured arms and ammunition into other African territories which to date have steadfastly refused to have dealings with them.

Further to this the Tanzanian government has accepted an offer from Peking for Chinese officers and NCOs to train the republic's army. It is interesting to note that the Canadian government is also financing and manning a similar training centre for Tanzanian soldiers.

Yet despite all this, and the fact that Tanzania is now being looked upon in most international circles as the Cuba of Africa, Canada blindly institutes a further program of military aid to this Communist-dominated nation.

Certainly few Canadian taxpayers would object to Canada financing a program of assistance to the backward African countries, for there is much to be done in the dark continent in the way of providing schools, hospitals, and public works to improve the lot of the African people.

But the spending of 9,000,000 Canadian dollars to increase the military might and efficiency of a Communist directed government which already poses a major threat to its neighbors should not be countenanced.

Physical Education

DURING THE SUNNY weather of March the children of Greater Victoria elementary schools came out of their cocoons for physical education periods out-of-doors. In many instances they were enthusiastic, healthy-looking groups. In others they were pathetically inept at the business of push-ups and bends. It is not entirely their fault.

Some schools do not possess indoor facilities for physical education and in others authority may not have the trained personnel to pursue a desirable program. Or it may be that principals prefer to concentrate on the basics of education. They have a considerable latitude.

Under the revised schedule of instructional time, cultural, recreational, music, art and physical educational periods can be curtailed. In some schools the physical education periods are cut down until weather permits outside classes; but the sacrificed time cannot always be regained.

It seems unprofitable to blame the teachers for any deficiency in this physical aspect of education, but many of them agree that they haven't had sufficient instruction at university level. They have a sound academic foundation, but a lack of appreciation of physical education needs. They get, perhaps 1½ hours of instruction a week during a six-month period. In Great Britain they get from four to six hours a week instruction during their training.

There is one aspect of our physical education program worthy of highest commendation: the swimming instruction for all grade five pupils. This year 2,200 of them will go to classes in 34 groups for eight 40-minute periods.

But it seems a pity there is no provincial director of physical education, as there is for home economics, for example, with inspectors to encourage that phase of learning.

It would be stimulating to all concerned. Recognizing the importance of such an administrative post, Mr. Lee Leavitt, Social Credit MLA for Calgary-Queen's Park, has proposed such a provincial supervisor for Alberta. There is much evidence, he says, to show that a child in sound physical condition will do better at his academic studies than one who is not.

If we aim at higher scholastic standards generally we would be wise to approach that task with the best possible physical equipment, and for a start we might do worse than consider the application to British Columbia of the Alberta legislator's suggestion.

Homework Ulcers

AN AMERICAN PHYSICIAN recently discovered that one of his patients—a 13-year-old boy—had developed stomach ulcers. According to the doctor the cause of the lad's unfortunate ailment was worry over homework and exams.

His finding quickly precipitated a nation-wide argument: Do children get too much homework and are exams too stiff?

The secretary of an American headmasters' association thinks they do and they are. "A good many of us are having second thoughts on the subject," he says, "and many of our schools are starting to cut back the amount of work required."

A British journalist in New York, intrigued by the question, conducted his own survey and found that most American parents he spoke to agreed that children were loaded with too much home work. Some complained that their children spent long hours on such meaningless essays as "My Day at the Zoo."

A school administrator told him that one of his pupils—driven hard by his mother to pass a college entrance exam—has "circles under his eyes most of the time."

However, despite all this the English reporter says this: "My own two children find it easier here than in England. Even so, they spend up to two hours a night each on homework."

So far, Canada has stayed well out of the argument. Perhaps our young Canucks have stronger stomachs.

EMO Shows Signs of Life

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

MAYBE it's Viet Nam. Could be the edgy state of international nerves. Or perhaps it's just that an all-embracing excursion to Ottawa for a spring-time conference among the daffodils and tulips is a mighty sociable idea.

But whatever the reason, the Emergency Measures Organization, which has remained quite decently comatose these many, many months, suddenly is threatening to come back to life.

The Emergency Measures Organization, or EMO, as it was known in its earlier headline-making days, is that oddball federal agency that taxpayer found in the political fallout following the shooting down by the Russians of the American U-2 "spy plane," and the resulting blow-up six years ago in Paris of the explosive Eisenhower-Khrushchev cold-war peace conference.

From nothing in those six short years, the EMO, while doing little more spectacular than building the not-so-secret but still-mysterious "Diefenbunker," deep-buried in the native Nepean sandstone 30 miles west of the capital, has mushroomed into a quite respectable little bureaucratic "empire," with an annual budget of $9,000,000, a staff of 219 and a $23,000-a-year director-general.

Now EMO is summoning all hands to Ottawa for a round-table on "Planning for Peace-time and Wartime Emergencies."

This call to action may come as a surprise to most people—especially those who let the EMO talk or learn them into building one of those since-forgotten "fallout shelters" in their backyards or basements.

(And how many thousands of cans of sardines went stale and how many bottles of apple juice soured into vinegar stored in those "fallouts" waiting for World War Omega?)

Strange that EMO would show its head again in public instead of just quietly and safely vegetating on the federal payroll, out of sight and out of mind like some other agencies.

(There are stories heard in these bureaucratic parts of wily, dust-powdered people, like so many elves, working away, neglected and all but forgotten in various government cubby-holes, with nobody knowing for sure what they are supposed to be doing. They have the ultimate security, for they can't be fired when nobody knows what to fire them from.)

And to think EMO, if it had bided its time, might have achieved this enviable state of unreachability. But no, it had to come back in the news.

And this is a bit surprising in view of its previous disasters.

The first came when it built the "Diefenbunker," described by eye-witness Liberal MP Grant Deschamps, a member of the Commons defence committee, as "that fabulous underground executive suite down which a select group of ministers and mandarins would pop at the first whiff of atomic smoke."

Since, ludicrously, it's still supposedly top secret, no public accounting ever has been made of the cost, though there have been no doubts that it could have run as high as $60,000,000.

The very grotesqueness of this monstrous luxury cave has been an embarrassment to the bureaucratic establishment that cradled it in a willy-punkily embrace of the "On the Beach" concept of doomsday defence.

With "On the Beach" long off the best-seller list and the nuclear-end-of-the-world panic over, Mr. Deschamps has suggested that the EMO declare it surplus and have the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation sell it off, at maybe one mill or less on the dollar, as a place to store the prairie wheat crop if Trade Minister Sharp shouldn't be able to peddle all those hundreds of millions of bushels to the Russians or the Chinese.

Even John Diefenbaker, for whose protection back in 1959 as prime minister the bunker was built, found it a humiliation. The EMO built it for him as a surprise, like some gargantuan gift for Christmas, and when they sprang it on him, he recoiled in horror, making a public point and great display of taking "shelter" in the basement of the prime minister's residence at 24 Sussex Drive during a mock nuclear obliteration of Ottawa and most of Eastern Canada.

The EMO had one other notable boob.

That came on another simulated nuclear air strike when the capital supposedly was going up in a mushroom cloud.

Defence headquarters scolded a city-wide battery of raid-warning sirens, then couldn't turn them off for almost an hour.

Everybody knows that—except EMO. And four days later the EMO capital zone co-ordinator said it was still all news to him. Nobody told him, he explained, and since, as he said, he didn't read the papers and never listened to radio, how was he to know?

Sure, that's right, the EMO stands for emergency.

Shortsighted Attitude

Our Readers' Views

To be considered for publication in this column, letters must be signed with full names, must be dated and must be given to the editor. Preference will be given to those that are brief.

WALTER J. G. Jenkins, in a letter to the Colonist, April 4, regarding "Discrimination against minorities, whether they be Negroes in the U.S., Jews in Russia and Germany, or Indians in Canada"...

"might well have included cripples here in Victoria which is intolerable."

A cripple, who unfortunately has to go about with the aid of a crutch, only wants to be treated like everybody else, as he should be, when he is paying his way with his own money and strictly minding his own business.

EARL NELSON, Suite 2, 224 Pakington St.

FLUORIDATION

The article on fluoridation in the Colonist of April 7 was rather interesting.

It appears that while the statement is made that "I don't think there is any officially documented evidence that is anything but good," the doctors are afraid of opposition, as Dr. H. R. Carter is quoted as saying, "The reason I don't want it delayed is that any delay would permit the anti-to being in speakers..."

Apparently the dear doctors don't realize that this is Oak Bay, still eminently British, and that fair play is one of their firm principles.

It is possible too that it will be found that the citizens of Oak Bay are educated, as stated, and that they will consider the matter carefully before voting on this controversial issue.

R. R. DAVIDSON, 825 Monterey Ave.

ANTI-AMERICANISM

Disappointed by the small audience which turned out for its Victoria appearance, a member of the Seattle Repertory Theatre has been reported to ask whether Victorians are anti-American.

As one of a growing number much to brighten up our sedate old Victoria during the summer months.

To me, all this fuss about alleged "anti-Americanism" can be boiled down to one simple question:

W. T. LAWSON, 1354 St. David St.

DISCRIMINATION

In regard to your paragraph in the Colonist of April 7—"Two Women Remember Seating Problem," I hope the unscathed woman who demanded another seat because the seat she had paid for happened to be next to that of a Negro gentleman, will hang her head in shame.

How can she be sufficiently interested in Shakespeare to attend the performance and then deliberately hurt the feelings of a fellow human being because his skin is a different color from hers?

(MRS.) P. WITHERSPOON, 1221 Rockland Ave.

COAST GUARD

With reference to the article "Well Protected," I believe that you missed the main point re Canadian coast guard capable of doing exposed rescue work, in stating that the search and rescue department has available positions of all commercial vessels most of the time, and navy services and a host of others. It only points out more starkly the fact that B.C. has no coast guard because we are relying on others to do a specialized job.

Where death occurs on the ocean we cannot blame those who rallied, tried and failed. Failed because honor bound them to do a job they were not equipped to do. Surely those of us who stand on dry land have an equal honor in building a capable, competent coast guard; one that will serve us proudly in our much ocean-oriented province.

What we have now is only a start, two ships, a nucleus that should have developed years ago, and which now must serve as the beginning of a new fleet of rescue vessels and a new training of thought.

Decimal Conversion

A Breathing Space

By THOMAS LAND

from London

BRITONS, along with the rest of the world, are awaiting patiently for the government here to decide the $300 million question of when and how the pound sterling is to be converted to the decimal system.

But it may be a much longer wait than anyone had expected. Reason: two opposed camps face each other in the board rooms of the large banks and finance companies and in the lobbies of Parliament. One advocates efficiency, the other prestige. Neither, however, rejects the urgency of the change, long overdue in the modern trading world.

James Callaghan, the chancellor of the exchequer, has told the House of Commons that the government, too, supports the idea. But, he added, "It is not yet in a position to make a statement on the introduction of a decimal coinage system."

What he obviously means is that the government, engaged in major tax reforms and fighting a perpetual balance-of-payment crisis, simply needs a breathing space before facing the decimalization issue. But sooner or later it will have to face it.

Many Canadian visitors to this country find the currency system one of the more awkward idiosyncrasies of the British way of life—like driving on the left-hand side of the road.

The pound, a unit worth a little more than $1, contains two 10-shilling notes, or eight half-crowns, or 10 florins, or 20 shillings, or 40 shillings, or 80 three-penny bits, or 240 pennies, or 480 half-pennies.

Two other monetary units, the crown (one quarter of a pound) and the farthing (one 100th of a pound) have been dropped for simplicity's sake.

Britain today stands alone among the major trading nations of the world with a currency system not yet decimalized. The most recent converts, Australia and New Zealand, have followed South Africa's example in choosing the 10-shilling unit as a basis for their new currencies.

But some major British financial concerns have expressed the hope that this country will retain the pound as the basis for the monetary system and thereby maintain the highest basic unit of currency in the world.

Their argument, introduced in the line of conflict which splits across Britain's political and financial interests.

A six-member committee appointed to advise the government on the how and when of the decimalization issue has been unable to offer a unanimous suggestion.

Four members have voted for retaining the pound as the basic currency, to be divided into 100 minor units, each subdivided by two. The other two members, however, have favored the 10-shilling unit as the basic currency, to be divided by 100.

The core of the problem is domestic efficiency versus international prestige.

Psychologists engaged by the committee to test the proposed systems say that the public would have far less difficulty in adapting to the 10 shilling, than to the pound shelve.

Advocates of the latter system, however, point to the international trend of inflation. If it is to continue, they argue, the British pound would have the best chance of emerging as the "master currency" of Europe—provided it is not chopped by half in value.

Both camps accept that the longer decimalization day (referred to in the committee report as D-day) is delayed, the more it will cost the country. According to modest estimates, the cost of business and vending machine conversion and replacement, and the expenditure at the Royal Mint, will be a minimum of $300 million.

The committee believes that the changeover would require at least three years' preparation plus an additional two years to complete it.

D-day would take place in

Comforting Comparisons

From The Spectator, Hamilton

LIFE is made worth living by the solaces one finds lurking around corners.

For the man over 50, tired and weary and still lingering on, there are those two footnotes of youth, soccer star Sir Stanley Matthews, age 50, and Canadian Johnny Longden, a star jockey at 57, to remind him that life isn't really over.

If you are over the hill at 60, think of Cary Grant, a romantic idol at 61.

And if you are bolder than the proverbial 50-50, think of all the sigh and wistfulness grooms that greet Yul Brynner's naked noggin.

Even the usually seer-depressed 40-to-50 crowd has its youth movements. There's John Bower, still stopping hockey pucks at 40 plus, and Warren Spahn, pitching big league baseballs at 44, to remind them that all is not really lost, especially if one keeps one's waist measurement below 40.

Yes, it's the solaces that count. Tennis anyone can have.

February, the time of year most convenient for banks and the retail trade. Banks and many government and private establishments would adopt the decimal system on D-day. But others would follow suit gradually.

Before and after the changeover, shops would label their goods with prices in both currencies.

Some will be saddened to see the end of the old pound sterling system which is as much part of the British tradition as cricket or a Horse Guards parade.

But the cash value of the time and business lost for Britain because of its archaic currency just isn't worth it.

U.S. Ships Bedecked

From Colonist Film

R. W. MAYHEW, then Liberal MP for Victoria, was right in one prediction and wrong in another in his annual report as B.C. chairman of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, 25 years ago.

Mr. Mayhew correctly foresaw that the wartime shipbuilding program in B.C. yards would prove of inestimable value in the growth of the industry on the West Coast, and would lay the foundations for a permanent shipbuilding business after the war.

He also anticipated, however, seeing a fleet of B.C. owned and operated vessels handling B.C. products "plying the trade routes of the world."

Victoria's whaling ships were preparing for the season: "The little killer ships of the Consolidated Whaling Corporation are being rapidly put in shape. Out on the ways of the VMD at present are the Blue and the White undergoing overhaul. The William Grant has already been finished..."

Reading colony allies to the United States was one measure planned to relieve unemployment in Vancouver 50 years ago.

"Col. Ogilvie has been instructed by the Ottawa government to co-operate with the provincial authorities in the matter of relieving the unemployment situation to whatever extent may be attained by the deportation of enemy aliens to the State of Washington... The U.S. command... is said to be favorable to measures which, while alleviating the situation in the neighboring mainland city, will work no injury to the present labor market in the State of Washington."

In view of the "critical state of affairs" the provincial government also decided to make a $10,000 appropriation for relief in Vancouver, and "a large number of single men have again been placed at work in the parks and roadways and the grounds of the General Hospital. The men are worked in four-hour shifts..."

"The weather during the past few days has been of a variety calculated to suit all tastes," the Colonist observed 75 years ago.

"On Thursday the dust clouds were whirled through the streets in true midsummer fashion: 12 hours later the ground was white with snow. Yesterday rain, hail and snow fell at regular intervals, and the people are now wondering what is to come next."

The British bark Earl of Derby had just arrived in Esquimalt, 145 days from London, with a full cargo of naval stores and general merchandise.

"The long trip was caused by heavy winds which the vessel encountered the whole way from the east country."

A test case against an opium smoker was before the court in the city.

"Mr. Bejvan, counsel for the defence, argues that the statute under which the city is empowered to collect a license fee from opium-smokers is ultra vires of the provincial legislature which enacted it..."

An incident on Langley Street earned the heading, "The American War in Victoria," 100 years ago.

"A fight took place last evening between Mr. Shaphard, of the Confederation Saloon, and Capt. Stratton of Nash Bay, Washington Territory, a staunch Union man."

"Stratton made some contemptuous remarks about the Confederate flag hoisted over the saloon, which was resented by Shaphard with a blow."

"A furious fight at once ensued, in which the 'Confederate' was severely beaten and ended for quarter, which the victorious 'Fed' at once granted."

"After the fight the police appeared on the scene, and proceeded to arrest Capt. Stratton who, however, was immediately hailed out. Shaphard was so severely injured that he was not conveyed to jail."

The civil war was in the news in another respect also: the George S. Wright, Eliza Anderson and all the other American vessels in port were gallily bedecked with flags in celebration of the news of the fall of Richmond and the success of the Federal army in Virginia.

Giant Land Wakes from Long Sleep to Push Back Frontiers

Australia 'Promised Land of 1960s'

By CHARLES HILLINGER
from Sydney

As the giant jet screeched above the unscarred face of midland Australia, preparing to land at the sprawling, city of Sydney, the well-dressed man leaned back in his seat and said:

"Australia is the promised land of the 1960s."

Nicholas S. Frangi, an immigrant from Milan and now one of Sydney's most successful restaurateurs, was echoing the sentiments of more than 2,000,000 people who have poured into Australia since the end of the Second World War.

Italians, Greeks, Britons, Germans, Spaniards, Swedes, French, Norwegians, Dutch, Poles, Yugoslavs and Americans have joined in this, one of the world's great migrations.

And there is no end in sight. Australia will accept as many Europeans and Americans as wish to come.

"If we don't fill this country with people, someone else may try to do it for us," say the high government officials, the cab driver and the university professor of their obsession about filling Australia's vast emptiness.

Red China's 700,000,000 people and 100,000,000 more in Indonesia, are at Australia's doorstep.

Australia, a nation the size of the United States, yet having but 11,000,000 people. NEEDS people.

There is no unemployment here. Sydney alone has 10,000 more jobs than people to fill them.

Australia is booming. There's nothing quite like it anywhere in the world. Australia is rapidly becoming industrialized, yet in 1945 its economy was geared almost entirely to agriculture. "Australia rides the sheep's back," they used to say.

As recently as 1948 every automobile was imported. Today, every other car is Australian-made, and cars also are exported to more than 60 nations.

Australia's factories also are turning out locomotives, aircraft, ships, television sets, consumer, pharmaceutical products, scientific instruments and hundreds of other items competing in world markets.

In the last 15 years foreign investments have exceeded $2,500,000,000, roughly divided between United States and the United Kingdom.

Last year alone such investments soared to $625,000,000. Australia's principal cities are as up-to-date as any in the world.

But "out back," where the cities and suburbs end, the land is being developed for the first time, with towns springing up across a vast unexplored continent.

Here is the story all over again of America in the 1830's. Like the United States in its formative years, Australia's cities hug its eastern shores, then there's a little more than frontier until you reach Perth on the west coast.

Australia is spending $200,000,000 million dollars for 1,500 miles of new railroad track, millions more for thousands of miles of road through areas never touched by civilization.

Canberra, the nation's capital, midway between Sydney and Melbourne, had 10,000 people in 1945. Today, 83,000 Australians live in this, the nation's largest inland city.

Red Couriers Had Cash In Girdles

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP)—Interior Minister Gonzalo Barrios announced Saturday the arrest of three foreign messengers, two of them women, carrying $330,000 from Italian Communists. He told a press conference the money was to be handed to Venezuela Communists to finance guerrilla operations.

The first agent was identified as Clara Varela de Padilla, a woman of Yugoslav-Argentine parentage who was arrested at the airport. The second was Alejandro Beltrami, said to be a Communist member of the Milan city council. The third was a Spanish woman, Josefa Ventosa Jimenez, who lives in Italy.

Barrios said the money was carried by the women in specially built girdles and by the man in a vest. He showed the press conference neatly packed bills in $100 denominations.

The arrests were made within the last month, Barrios said, but added that other details must be kept secret. He said all three probably will be expelled and not prosecuted.

Barrios announced that the confiscated money would go to widows and other survivors of police, military men and civilians killed fighting the Communist terrorists and guerrillas.

Elizabeth, a wheat field 30 years ago, is South Australia's second largest city with a population of 40,000. It will be double that in two years.

Forty per cent of all the people in Australia live in Sydney (2,300,000) and Melbourne (2,000,000).

No city in the world can match Sydney's concentration of new skyscrapers with 34 buildings, from 13 to 35 storeys high, rising along the harbor's famed circular quay.

Slicing through the heart of the city is Australia's first free-way project, the 50-mile Sydney to Newcastle expressway.

In the past five years, through irrigation, millions of acres of wasteland have blossomed into lush settlements, into going farms, rice and sugar cane fields, vineyards, orchards and cotton groves.

One of the world's great engineering projects, the $1,000,000 Snowy Mountain hydro electric scheme, is reversing direction of a network of rivers, turning them from east to west to irrigate parched land rather than run to the sea.

By harnessing the melting snows of Australia's southern alps between Sydney and Melbourne, 2,300,000 acre feet of water a year will be available for irrigation, 3,000,000 kilowatts of power will provide electricity to three Australian states.

Australia is so late in getting started that half of its dozen universities are less than five years old.

Australia's gold and foreign exchange reserves each month set new records. Cost and price levels are remarkably stable.

And Australia occupies a strategic hot seat.

Peacetime conscription is taking place for the first time, with a call up this year of 4,200 men for two years service.

Prime Minister Robert Menzies maintains it is necessary because of "Australia's deteriorating defense position as a result of recent Indonesian policies and actions and the growth of communist influence and armed activity in South East Asia."

Full page newspaper ads urge young men to "Take Your Best Step In — 65-Join The Regular Army."

In Australia there is no such thing as the Far East. Here, it's the near north.

The nation is awakening to the menace of Sukarno and Mao Tse-Tung.

Yet, Australians are easy going.

Gambling is a way of life. Slot machines, horse and dog racing, lotteries are part of every day living. In New South Wales $54,000,000 is wagered annually on state-operated lotteries. There's a lottery drawing at 8:45 a.m. every day in Sydney.

Every three weeks, $421,000 in tax free prizes are paid out in the state's biggest drawing. Tickets sell at $6.75 each and 100,000 are sold.

Australia, a man's world, is the most sports-minded nation on earth.

Men are so wrapped up in the race track, cricket, football, lawn bowling, tennis, golf, the beach, that awards are given those who go three weeks without missing a day's work.

It's a country where weekends are so sacred that anyone working them — even if he has two midweek days off — receives double time for Saturday and Sunday.

Albania Opens Balkan Door

Chinese Missiles in Europe

By LAJOS LEDERER
From London

The recent visit by Chinese Premier Chou En-lai to Albania, ostensibly aimed at strengthening Peking's ideological position, has — according to reports from Belgrade — turned into a daring Chinese-Albanian military pact, which will give China her first military foothold in Europe.

China is reported to have been "granted permission" to build rocket and naval bases in Albania. In prevailing conditions the Chinese move is one of the most provocative yet in her efforts to influence East European developments, particularly in neighboring Yugoslavia.

Marshal Tito has recently been disturbed at reports of the arrival of large numbers of Chinese rockets and submarines in Albanian ports. Yugoslav papers have warned the Chinese leadership "of their reckless and irresponsible policy in Albania." Some of the missiles have been on parade in Tirana to boost the morale of the Albanian people, who are suffering severe economic conditions.

The Albanians now admit that they possess "surface-to-air missiles," but they make no mention of their origin. Albania's primitive technology makes it unlikely that she herself could have built any of these armaments.

But Tirana's boasts on the eve of the Chinese premier's visit that "these rockets are capable of delivering a heavy blow to the aggressor who dares to attack our country" confirm conclusions drawn by Yugoslav sources, that they were supplied by China.

For some time it has been known that Albania was receiving military, economic and technical aid from Peking. It has, in fact, been arriving since 1961, when, after Albania's break with Moscow, all Soviet aid was suspended. Many Chinese military, naval and technical personnel are now in the country.

Chou En-lai's statement on leaving Albania that China is "ready to give all military aid to their loyal European partners against any aggression" is clearly designed to cover Chinese ambitions to establish a military base in Europe.

Federal Tory Leadership Long-Time Goal

Fulton Jockeys for Glittering Prize

By IAN STREET

The resignation of E. David Fulton so far has failed to produce any sort of stampede for the provincial leadership of the Tory party.

It seems to have been generally accepted that this is to be an east-west swap.

Mr. Fulton will go to the Commons as an MP, and national leadership aspirant, while Stuart Fleming, the 44-year-old Okanagan-Revelstoke MP, returns to B.C. and the provincial leadership.

This neat and tidy arrangement could be upset, of course, between now and next November when it is expected the new B.C. leader will be formally picked. But that is unlikely.

Mr. Fleming has already announced he will not run again as a federal candidate. He wants to devote more time to his family wholesale distributing business in Vernon. This he could do while provincial leader.

He is clearly the odds-on choice for the job; young (only 44), able, and very personable. Other top Tories in the province, including former leadership candidate J. Fergie Browne and potential leaders like lawyers Ian Pyper, Gowan Guest and Galt Wilson, have all said they will not be candidates this time.

So much, then, for the B.C.

CAPITAL REPORT

Now Dr. Willoughby, to no one's surprise, has announced that he will retire from the Commons.

Mr. Fulton, 49, held the Kamloops federal seat for 15 years and there is little doubt that he will win it again, though not with the ease he has achieved this in the past.

In 1958 he had a majority of 10,990. In 1962 this was cut to 5,333, and in 1963 Dr. Willoughby barely held the seat for the Tories with a slim 245 vote margin.

What has Mr. Fulton achieved since he returned to B.C. after being demoted from justice to public works in the Diefenbaker cabinet?

He failed in his declared intention to overthrow Premier Bennett, lost to Highways Minister Gagliardi in the 1963 provincial election, failed even to seat one Tory in the legislature.

But, like all provincial leaders, Mr. Fulton during his term had some influence on the choice of constituency officers throughout the province. When a national leadership convention is called, these local officers become voting delegates. Many are likely to give their vote to Mr. Fulton.

The fact that his successor as Tory candidate for Kamloops was Dr. Charles Willoughby, now 71, indicates clearly, I think, that he was merely to keep the seat warm for Mr. Fulton.

Money a Relative Thing

Gosh! Wow! Phew!

By A. H. MURPHY

I can never quite get over the casual, almost airy, way big sums of money are handled at city hall.

It may be, of course, that being a newspaperman, rather than a real estate salesman or a plumber, I have been conditioned to deal with money in minuscule amounts.

But it still bothers me to see, what represents to me two or three years salary, disposed of with two minutes' discussion and a 10 or 15-word resolution.

This is highlighted by the fact that committees will occasionally sit and argue and baffle almost interminably over some measly grant of $200 (often in the face of laid-down and established policy) and then, practically in the next breath, sweep through an item calling for expenditure in the thousands.

This is not necessarily wrong. There might well be a matter of principle involved in the spending of the smaller amount and the larger expenditure be merely routine.

Nor is this meant as criticism. When a city council is trying, as is the present one, to peel $600,000 or $700,000 off an estimated budget of $12,500,000, all in the space of two weeks, it can't afford to sit around and bicker over triflingities.

As a matter of fact I think city hall is doing a good job of sweating the fat out of what at first appeared to be an unwieldy, massive total of estimated spending in 1965.

I realize, also, that aldermen of city officials who haggle over small amounts, unless of course big principles are involved, are wasting their time and impairing their value to the city.

It's just that I can't seem to adjust my scale of values. I have seen $200 represented as an important sum of money. On other occasions I have heard discussion of sums up to $5,000 brought to an abrupt halt with the remark: "Well it's hardly worth spending the afternoon over. Let's get on with it, shall we? We'll find the money somewhere."

CITY HALL COMMENT

And, it's true that within the context of the discussion the amount was not worth spending too much time on.

It's just that it kind of bothers me.

I know that such an admission will mark me as a boy from the boombocks and that, because my values are immature and my outlook un sophisticated, I may henceforth be anathema in civic financial circles, but it's a chance I'll have to take.

Seattle People Subsidized Victoria Shows!

By JOAN MANON HURLEY

Everyone knows that the city guaranteed the Seattle Repertory Theatre $8,000 to come here.

What everyone may not know is that the company's expenses for their week in Victoria were considerably in excess of $8,000.

Who is making up the difference? The patrons of the Seattle Repertory Theatre. That's who. These are private individuals who contribute from $50 to several thousand each, simply because they feel that theatre is a part of life—like a library, a symphony or an art gallery.

It is to these generous citizens of Seattle then, that those Victorians who turned out to see Twelfth Night and Ah! Wilderness owe the privilege of being able to attend performances by the fourth ranked repertory company in the United States.

Expenses $10,650

Here are their expenses for the week, given me by Norman Israel, business manager of the company:

Salaries ..... $ 7,000
Local stage hands 800
Trunk rental ..... 1,350
Transportation ... 1,100
Miscellaneous ... 100

$10,650

This means that the Seattle citizens paid $2,650 to bring Twelfth Night and Ah! Wilderness to an unappreciative Victoria. One can only suppose that they look upon it in the light of a missionary work!

Had the shows not been mounted in Seattle, the cost would have been even higher.

The Customs evaluation of the Seattle Repertory's set, costumes and lighting equipment alone was $18,000.

Mr. Israel gave work to 10 local stagehands in Victoria whom he engaged from the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Forty-eight people came over with the company, including married couples and children.

All these stayed in hotels, buying meals, paying baby-sitters, renting cars and shopping for presents on which they paid 5 per cent tax to the provincial government.

The company of 48 was here for eight days. How much of that $8,000 did they take home?

Cultural Hicks

Whatever pretensions we Victorians have tried to adduce to ourselves, the pathetic lack of interest in the Seattle Repertory seems to prove that culturally we are little short of an overgrown provincial village.

It would appear that we are not yet ready for our own theatre, not ready for professional entertainment — we are quite happy to take in each other's theatrical washing and attend each other's amateur productions in church halls and basements.

We don't really need to see good theatre, for seemingly we have nothing to learn.

Who's Going to Pay?

What of the future? Do we want this type of entertainment back? I can't help but feel we do.

There will come a time when Victorians must become aware that they have a theatre—that they will want the best in entertainment. But who is going to pay for it? Not the city, again.

Robert Killean, manager of the McPherson, suggests that service clubs could sponsor professional companies. If members saw that all tickets were sold, a substantial profit could accrue to their club.

Mr. Israel said that this was done in other cities the Repertory has played in. For example, in Yakima the Allied Arts Council sponsored them. This council consisted of the Symphony, Little Theatre and Art Gallery joining forces.

If we don't wish to improve our minds or broaden our experience, is it fair to deny our children also?

Here are some figures on the Seattle Repertory Theatre's tour given me by Mr. Israel:

The number of school children who saw matinee performances of Twelfth Night was:

Yakima (pop. 43,000) 900
Spokane (pop. 121,000) 600
Portland (pop. 372,000) 700 and in Victoria (pop. 154,000) 130 children saw it, plus 70 from Chemainus.

Factory Wages At New High

WASHINGTON (AP) — There were 17,800,000 Americans at work in manufacturing last month, the greatest number in 21 years, and factory overtime and earnings were at new highs, the U.S. labor department reports. ## No Mercy to Be Shown Next Season

There's Worse TV Fare to Come!

By BRUCE LOWTHER
Colonist TV Editor

Spies and serials are supposed to be the big trends on the U.S. television networks, but here's a shocker — more than half of the 32 new shows scheduled for the 1965-66 season are the same old situation comedies.

ABC, CBS and NBC have "completed" their schedules for the season starting next Sept. 13 — there are bound to be a few last-minute changes — and the saddest news of all is only two quality programs in 75 hours.

The 75 hours represents the hours from 7:30 to 11 p.m., the so-called prime time, on the three networks in one week.

The two holdouts from westerns, courtroom, variety and comedies with recorded laughter are ABC Scope and CBS Reports. And they're among the likely casualties if late changes are made.

Schedules have to be made up by Easter or earlier because advertisers must budget ahead — billions are at stake.

Canada's two networks are under similar pressure in varying degrees but won't announce their plans for a month or two until they can look at advances of the U.S. newcomers.

They need some to fill their schedules because Canada, government and advertisers, can't afford an all-Canadian schedule. Did you know 70 per cent of the CBC programming comes from the U.S.?

Christ Church Cathedral

Mozart's Misere To Be Sung Today

An opportunity to hear some outstanding church music is being presented to Victorians in the 4 p.m. service at the Cathedral today to open Holy Week.

Everyone familiar with the life of Mozart recalls how as a boy he heard the famous Misere in Rome, the music of which was secret and no copies ever allowed to be made, and how from one hearing he was able to write down the complete score.

Mozart's father was terrified.

but the Pope was so struck with his achievement that he forgave him.

This work will be performed today with five and six-part choir, and beautiful solo voices and instrumentalists by the outstanding boy treble, 12-year-old Bill Dyson. A Palestrina anthem, "O Saviour of the World," is also to be heard.

A few other shows almost qualify for quality status, such as Danny Kaye, Bob Hope's Chrysler Theatre, The FBI Story and Slattery's People.

But whether the topic be war, witchcraft, marriage, children, hillbillies or what have you, the situation comedy will be king.

Here's how the 1965-66 U.S. network schedules stand now, from 7:30 to 11 p.m. seven days a week, with explanations only when vitally needed:

● SUNDAY, ABC, Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea, the FBI Story and Movies; CBS, My Favorite Martian, Ed Sullivan, Perry Mason, Candid Camera and What's My Line; NBC, Walt Disney, Bonanza and Bonanza and Wackiest Ship in the Army.

Perry Mason goes against Bonanza in an all-out CBS effort to knock off the ratings king. Wackiest Ship in the Army is an hour-long war comedy, and we all know war is very funny.

● MONDAY, ABC, 12 O'Clock High, Jesse James, Shenandoah Man, Farmer's Daughters and Ben Casey; CBS, To Tell the Truth, I've Got a Secret, Lucy, Andy Griffith, Hazel and Steve Lawrence; NBC, Hullabaloo, Mr. and the Misses, Dr. Kildare, Andy Williams and Run for Your Life.

Jesse James and Shenandoah Man are a couple of half-hour westerns, which we need like a bullet in the back. Steve Lawrence's music and variety hour might be all right.

But Mr. and the Misses is about this bachelor who turns a girls' school and Run for Your Life is about this amnesiac who, fugitive-like, scours the world for his identity. Hoo, boy!

● TUESDAY, ABC, Combat, McHale's Navy, F. Troop, Peyton Place, Fugitive; CBS, Rawhide, Red Skelton, Petticoat Junction, CBS Reports; NBC, My Mother the Car, Please Don't Eat the Daisies, Dr. Kildare and Movies.

F Troop is another war comedy, My Mother the Car has Ann Southern reincarnated as a car. Daisies includes demoniac but funny children and Dr. Kildare is a half-hour twice weekly.

You might think this makes Tuesday horrible, but wait!

● WEDNESDAY, ABC, Ozzie and Harriet, Patty Duke, Gidget, Big Valley and Amos Burke; Secret Agent; CBS, Lost in Space, Beverly Hills, Country Cousins, Dick Van Dyke and Danny Kaye; NBC, Virginian, Hope's Theatre and I Spy.

Gidget is a gear. Patty Duke, Big Valley a "class" western. Amos Burke has turned into a James Bond. Lost in Space is obvious. Country Cousins is more hillbillies and I Spy is different only in that it gives comic Bill Cosby the first network series role ever given to a Negro.

● THURSDAY, ABC, Shindig, Donna Reed, OK Crackerby, Bewitched, Peyton Place and Long, Hot Summer; CBS, Munsters, Gilligan's Island, My Three Sons and Movies; NBC, Daniel Boone, Laredo, Mona McCuskey and Dean Martin.

Crackerby is a hillbilly played by Burl Ives; Long, Hot Summer is a sexy serial. Laredo is (surprise!) a western. Mona McCuskey is about a movie star with a soldier husband and Dean Martin is a lush with bad taste.

● FRIDAY, ABC, Flintstones, Tammy, Addams Family, Honey West, Peyton Place, and Jimmy Dean; CBS, Wild West, Hogan's Heroes, Gomer Pyle, Smothers Brothers and Slattery's People; NBC, Camp Runamuck, Hank, Conroy, Mr. Roberts and Man from U.N.C.L.E.

Tammy is a square Gidget, Honey West a lady spy and note Peyton Place is on three nights a week. Wild West is obvious. Hogan's Heroes is a funny POW camp, the Smothers Brothers are only occasionally funny. Camp

Drama, Music, Song, Variety In Store

By BERT BINNY

This is festival month. The Southern Vancouver Island Drama Festival takes place next week.

Eight plays complete before adjudicator Tom Kerr of Kamloops at the McPherson Playhouse April 20, 21, and 22, with each evening's performance starting at 8:15.

The complete program is as follows:

Tuesday, April 20: A Rebounding Tinkle (Theatre Guild of Victoria). Hangs Over Thy Head (St. Matthias Little Theatre Society). The Shoe-maker's Wife (Pinnacles Playhouse).

Wednesday, April 21: The Invisible Worm (Lake Cowichan). Rise and Shine (Lake Cowichan). The Grand Duchess (St. Luke's Players).

Thursday, April 22: Scandalize (The Old Vic Players). Bedtime Story (Duncan Players).

The balance of Thursday's program will be occupied with the announcement and distribution of awards.

The Greater Victoria Music Festival, concentrated mostly this year at Fellowship and St. John's Halls on Balmoral Street, opens April 26 with the adult section running through April 30 when the Honor Performance takes place at the McPherson Playhouse.

The Rose Bowl, awarded to the top competitor in the vocal division, is awarded at this performance as is the City of Victoria Medallion which goes to the best competing pianist.

There are two events of note during the coming week.

Tomorrow the Arion Choir, numbering some 50 voices, with conductor Frank Tupman, guest artist Eleanor Duff and accompanist Helen McVie, will give a recital at St. Andrew's Kirk Hall starting at 8:15 p.m.

Arion soloists are Fred Wright, Les Hamsworth, Robert Greenwood, James McVie and John McVie of the Rotary Boys' Choir.

The Arion is Canada's most durable male choir having been formed in 1882 when 13 gentlemen, "with a total disregard for superstition," formed a choir under William Gregg.

The program tomorrow is a varied one and includes compositions of Schubert, Dvorak and Vaughan Williams as well as such popular items as Hermand's Hildegarde from Pajama Game, the Hippopotamus Song, Dr. Foster and the famous Men of Harlech.

On Wednesday the McPherson Playhouse has the Daffodil Revue which is one feature of the annual Daffodil Festival sponsored by the Victoria Chamber of Commerce.

Featured are Fred Usher's orchestra with soloist Terry Cain, magicians Carl and Lettie Hermon, singer-comedian-instrumentalist Reg Sieder and dancer Anne Appleby.

Actors, Technicians Sought for Training

By LINDA CRAWFORD

MONTREAL (CP) — "Anyone who loves the theatre and wants to work in it is a valid candidate" for the National Theatre School, says David Peacock, one of the school's directors who will conduct a cross-country audition tour this spring.

"The tour will be a double search for talent," he explains. "With so many new theatres going up across Canada for the centennial celebrations, there is a crying need for technicians as well as actors."

The National Theatre School offers a three-year acting course and a two-year production course, with an optional third year. Actors and technicians work together on full-scale staging of plays.

Applications for the next courses must reach the school

Beauty Unscathed by Fame

She Has Been Stopping Traffic for Five Years

By CHARLES CHAMPLIN

LOS ANGELES—Once upon a time a young lady walked into a nest of ink-stained wretches where I worked and stopped traffic, conversation and normal respiration. Her name, it was discovered in due haste, was Ann-Margret.

She had auditioned for George Burns in a dusty movie lot warehouse and done a week in Las Vegas with him, singing "Bill Bailey" and "Mack the Knife." She stopped a lot of traffic there, too, and when she appeared among the wretches you could hear fame thundering on like an express train.

LOVELY, LOOKY

It is now five years, nine months and several albums later. She is lovely, she's looky and she's engaged—but only to Fox, Columbia, MGM, Universal, United Artists, Frank Sinatra Enterprises and Paramount. Walt Disney must have been looking the other way.

After her next picture, she walks off with the $90,000 Helen Rose wardrobe; it's part of the deal.

Fame destroys some, corrupts

'It's Fun To Be A Woman'

others and leaves almost no one untouched. It seems to have had on Ann-Margret the effect of an increased allowance.

"All I know is, I just go to work every day," she says. On the other hand, she commutes on a Honda 150 motorcycle and will shortly graduate upward to a Triumph 500. There is an explanation for this:

NO SMOKE, DRINK

"I don't smoke or drink, and when I get wound up I can't polish off a fifth of whatever it is people polish off. Vodka, is it? Or smoke a carton of cigarettes. Driving the cycle releases me."

Otherwise, fame has afforded an eyrie above Beverly Hills for her perambulations. "I'm so pleased about that." Plus a swinging house for herself: "One room in green, another coral-red-pink kind of a thing. Flocked wallpaper, red and gold, you know." Plus clothes: "I'm nutty about clothes. I enjoy being a woman. Textured stockings, velvet clothes, lace. A pink Cadillac. It's fun to be a woman. You don't see many men in pink Cadillacs."

Preserving a private life has been less easy. "I've studied the lives of the women who have

Never on Mondays!

By PATRICK O'NEILL

Victorians are Friday and Saturday night theatregoers.

This conclusion, common to small cities, has been cemented by early experience of the McPherson Playhouse.

Shows running a week gap on Monday, sign on Saturday. So far, shows at the Playhouse have been running 70-80 per cent of house capacity at the weekend, as low as 6 per cent Monday.

Can ingrained theatre habits of the city's audience, visible and potential, be altered?

'PAPERING'

The manager of the theatre wants to resort to the time-honored theatrical practice of "papering" the first-night audience.

This involves getting a big, though largely unpaying audience into the theatre on the first night.

In theory, if the show meets with the approval of a big Monday-night house, the audience will rush out as volunteer ad-men, boost the show to friends, and it will snowball. In theory.

But anyway manager Robert Ellison says he is not allowed to pursue this course by civic officials, who he says have yet to realize fully that "running a theatre is a specialized art."

OVER HIS HEAD

He claims policy set over his head dictates there will be no papering, the audience will pay Monday as it will pay Saturday.

Pointing to the fact that 51 persons lost themselves in the 800-plus seat playhouse last Monday night, as Twelfth Night opened, the manager said: "This wasn't necessary."

Vera Trueman

Robert Ellison

He asked "would these 51, telling their friends about the show, have had any effect? It's doubtful."

Publicity, word-of-mouth, paid, or free from the press, will not sell a show to the general public if they can't afford to attend.

To fill 800 seats six nights a week (the desire, not the prospect) we need 4,800 patrons. This will require more than the traditional elite corps of drama buffs.

PLA'S BABY-SITTER

Top prices for Ah Wilderness! $4, mean a couple has to pay $8 to get in the door. Baby-sitting pushes the cost over the $10 mark for the younger set. You have to be a damned dedicated theatregoer to attend all the shows at those prices," commented a Victoria theatrical director who has been associated with theatre here since she signed up with a local group in 1938.

TWO OTHER VIEWS

Mrs. Vera Trueman has just returned from taking a local production of Importance of Being Earnest to a second-place finish in B.C. regional Dominion Drama Festival competition at Kelowna.

She said this is a Friday-Saturday town, and high prices compound the problem for the general public.

In his recent Life With Father visit to Victoria professional performer Sam Payne told me he believes civic theatres should keep prices at rock-bottom, in turn more taxpayers into theatregoers.

Mr. Ellison said prices are now geared to the number he expects to attend, and what the show costs.

But, I asked, if the prices are kept down, won't the audience increase, making early nights more profitable, equalling out the return, and enable more persons to see the show?

"It's a valid line of argument," he said. "But people are funny. They may not respect it, if they don't have to pay for it."

And how can they respect it if they can't afford to see it? "My feeling is, keep prices as low as possible," he said. But he rejected the rush-seats-only-no-reserve concept, where all tickets are the same price and devil take the hindmost.

Canning Firm, Staff Agree

KELOWNA (CP)—Employees of canning firm, Sun Rye Products Limited have agreed to a new contract that gives them retroactive pay increase ranging between 13 and 15 per cent. Classified help—truck drivers, mechanics, technicians and engineers—will receive a 15 per cent increase. Unclassified workers, including laborers, will receive 13 per cent. The raises are retroactive to Jan. 1, 1965.

Fine—let's all protest any inadequacy in operating grants for Uvic by the province. No student should be harassed with added worries about tuition costs; grades are worry enough. But at the same time, let's support the Tri-University Fund by the province. If there is no room for new students, that's a worse worry than scraping up the fees.

More Room For Inmates

Foundations for a three-wing dormitory have been laid at William Head minimum security institution. The new addition will provide better sleeping quarters for the 110 inmates.

Examining University of Victoria students can clear their minds of worry about whether they will be able to find summer jobs, says the National Employment Service.

In spite of 1,000 undergraduate applications and only 250 definite jobs being on file, the NES is confident the odds will level off.

Student Jobs 'No Worry'

"Off" for Two Weeks

Observer Gets New Owners

"There is every indication all students who register for summer employment will be placed in jobs," said NES Victoria manager George Bevis. "The local situation now looks promising but much will depend on the weather and the tourist trade."

The Victoria weekly newspaper, The Observer, has been sold and won't be published for two weeks.

Well-known former newspaperman and radio announcer Monte Roberts has been appointed editor and given "complete control over editorial policy," he said Saturday.

David Smeaton heads the new company as president and publisher, while Mrs. Elizabeth Inman is vice-president. Lawyer John Wood is secretary-treasurer and Gordon B. Elworthy of Island Tug and Barge is director.

Empress Invasion

Rotarians Roll Into City For Convention

Rotary Club wheels are spinning through a four-day Victoria convention which began this weekend.

Registrations began Saturday in a virtual takeover of the Empress Hotel by about 1,300 delegates and wives.

Mostly professional men and business executives, the Rotarians represent 45 clubs in Western Washington State and on Vancouver Island with a total membership of 4,000.

The 300 local members, hosts will feature speakers including Lieutenant-Governor Penikese.

Attorney-General Penikese, University of Victoria president Malcolm Taylor and former Victoria mayor Percy Scarrath. The service club conference speakers including Lieutenant-Governor Penikese, Attorney-General Penikese, University of Victoria president Malcolm Taylor and former Victoria mayor Percy Scarrath.

No Deliveries

Mail Service Cut For Good Friday

Mail service will be curtailed Good Friday, the post office announced Saturday.

Canceled for the day will be letter carrier delivery, rural mail delivery, post office window service and money order and savings bank service.

Normal holiday service will apply to special delivery and mail receipts and dispatches.

The post office box lobby will be open 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. and there will be evening collection only from letter boxes.

'Gift to Universities Fund An Investment in Future'

Money given to the tri-universities capital fund is not a donation but an investment in the future, says W. H. Armstrong, Vancouver Island fund chairman.

Mr. Armstrong said everyone on Vancouver Island is affected by higher education.

"If it is not for their sons and daughters, it is for their brothers and sisters or their nieces and nephews."

"If not these, the national product itself affects everyone," he said.

Education is the biggest and one of the most important tools we have, but to develop this tool we need more buildings, he said. Former University of Victoria student council president Mrs. Olivia Barr has said the shortage of classroom, laboratory and study space is acute.

"Space shortage already forces students to eat and study in parking lots, stairwells and halls," she said.

Straight Up

Nearing completion in factory at Mannheim, Germany, is second prototype of German vertical take-off plane. It will be test-flown after Easter by U.S. pilot George Bright, who crashed with first model of aircraft that has reversible engines on wing-tips.

Dawson Cityirate Over Edmonton 'Claim-Jumping'

DAWSON CITY, Yukon (CP)—Residents of this land of the soundbays, 1,200 miles north-west of Edmonton, are out in full cry over what they say is Klondike claim-jumping by the Alberta capital.

The terms Klondike Days and Klondike Mike are being used to promote the annual Edmonton Exhibition, a major summer-time attraction in that city.

The ire of Yukon residents was fully aroused when the Edmonton association applied for, and received, copyright protection for the names. A last-minute letter of protest from the Yukon reached Ottawa too late to prevent the federal stamp of approval on the application.

"ONLY TREASURE"

"It's the same as claim-jumping," says Tim Cole, past president of the Klondike Visitors Association in Dawson City. "When they have gone that far, they are threatening Dawson City's only treasure."

He says there are fears Edmonton will use its greater promotional resources and dominate the Dawson City Klondike Days, staged now in the actual surroundings of the 1898 Klondike gold rush.

"How can you move the locale of Klondike history from its true home to Edmonton?" Mr. Cole asks.

He says Edmonton should concentrate on its own history of fur trading and early pioneers instead of "stealing" Yukon history.

David Wright, public relations director of the Edmonton Exhibition Association, replies that the city has no intention of transplanting the Klondike image entirely to Edmonton.

PROMOTE NORTH

"But such a colorful theme will go a long way to focusing attention on Edmonton and northern Canada. We have never attempted to indicate Edmonton was the site of the Klondike."

Retiring

Career of nearly half-century will end Monday with retirement of Donald Mitchell, federal transport department's chief radio inspector here.

His radio service began in 1917 with British Transport Service and he joined federal service in 1941. Mr. Mitchell plans retirement trip to Europe.

On New Alberta Strike

Banff Oils Spurts $2

By HARRY YOUNG

Oil exploration interest is hotting up as a result of the find made by Banff Oils in northern Alberta just 17 miles away from the British Columbia border.

The Calgary company's shares have been the not feature of the past week's stock market. They have risen to a new high of $3.75, a gain of nearly $2 within the past few sessions.

Yet Banff holds only a five per cent interest in the field. The major participants are Suncor Mobil of Canada and Agip of Canada, a company controlled by the French government.

Unofficial reports are that the pay zone is 700 feet, but Banff goes no further than to say the zone tested flowed between 1,200 and 3,600 barrels a day. A second well to the southeast of the discovery well is also reported unofficially to have been a winner, but again there is no confirmation from Banff.

The British Columbia mines and petroleum department is excited about Zama Lake because of its proximity to the B.C. boundary and the fact that the oil is coming from the same area that has provided tremendous natural gas wells near Fort Nelson.

"If Zama Lake is part of the Fort Nelson field, the area has huge possibilities," said a B.C. petroleum officer.

"But so far no one is working anywhere near Zama on our side of the border."

Of interest, however, is the fact that most of the oil reservoirs on the B.C. side of the border near Zama Lake are held by major oil companies. The largest tract is held jointly by Texaco, Shell, Suncor, Mobil and B.A. Also with holdings in the district are Pacific Petroleum and Sinclair Oil, Imperial Oil, Western Natural Gas and Pacific Petroleum; and, in another group Pacific, Sohio and Caigay and Edmonton.

Most of these companies have been going easy on their exploration in the Fort Nelson area because it had been dismissed as "gas prone." As the market for natural gas from that area at the moment is limited, greater activity was probably not justified.

"But it will be entirely different if Zama Lake proves there is an oil potential as well," said the B.C. spokesman. "We would certainly expect a rash of new drilling activity."

Questions...Answers

Q. Can you tell us the cause of water condensing on the sills of our new home? We have a hot water furnace and thought the hot pipes under the house and cool air might have caused it. But we wrapped the pipes with insulation and the water still appears on the sills. We would appreciate any information on this problem.

A. It takes time before plaster, concrete and other materials become thoroughly dry in a newly-built house. This often is the source of moisture, but it is only temporary and will cease when the house thoroughly dries.

However, there are other causes for moisture in the house. In fact, moisture condensation is one of the most difficult and common problems in a home. Frequently condensation will occur when there is not enough heat in all rooms of the house, or if the heating system does not maintain a uniform temperature.

Damp air can be carried off by ventilation on bright, dry days. Excess moisture in the house can also come from cooking vapors or drying of laundry or from steam from hot showers.

Q. We bought a house which has a vaulted ceiling. The water with 100 feet of 2-inch diameter pipe runs along the ceiling. Can this be done without leaving marks?

A. There is a deal of water in the vaulted ceiling. It is not a good idea to have water in the ceiling. If you cannot find this product, try soaking the ceiling with water, allowing it to soak about 20 minutes. Then lift up the edge of the ceiling with a blunt-edged knife, being careful not to mar the finished surface.

Q. I am writing in regards to my basement. When it rains hard, the water seeps in around the floor. The wall was put up first and the floor was poured later. What would you advise me to do? I am afraid that in time my furnace will be ruined.

A. Another moisture problem—the most common household complaint. I receive more questions about excess moisture than any other one subject. Water seepage from the outside can be stopped in two ways: By diverting or removing the water which collects around a foundation; by sealing the walls and floor to prevent water from getting through.

Often it is much easier to prevent surface water from entering a basement than it is to waterproof it. This is done by proper drainage, sloping the grade away from the house, and using drain tiles, if necessary.

As for waterproofing the walls, there are products on the market for sealing masonry surfaces. These include the new epoxy sealers which can be applied with a paint brush and are "guaranteed" according to the manufacturer's claims, to produce a permanent, waterproof bond on concrete, or masonry block and other materials.

Q. I have a split-level house and when it rains, water seems to seep through the walls into the lower level. What can I do to correct this?

A. I presume the walls are of masonry construction. If so, there is an epoxy-type finish on the market recommended for waterproofing masonry surfaces. It is a clear finish and may be applied on the interior. Any measures you can take to improve the drainage of water away from your house also should help.

an asphalt driveway directly on the topsoil without the average homeowner being aware he has paid for a poorly constructed piece of work, which is doomed to failure within a few months.

One of the most important steps in driveway construction is the preparation of the base. The type of soil should be checked first, as any drainage problems may be eliminated.

HOW IT'S DONE After the topsoil has been removed, layers of crushed stone or pit-run gravel are compacted into the subsoil by means of a heavy power roller, and prior to the laying of at least two inches of asphalt, a weed-killer should be applied.

Without the correct preparation of the base a good driveway cannot be built," said Bruce Whitehead, estimator and supervisor of a Victoria paving firm.

In laying the blacktop a well-trained crew is needed, he pointed out.

When the trucks are loaded at the asphalt plant the temperature of the load is approximately 300 degrees, and if it is applied and rolled when it is too hot it has a tendency to stick to the rollers.

If, on the other hand, the temperature has dropped below a certain point when it is rolled, there will be unsuitable compaction in the asphalt, and the driveway more than likely will crack and start to break up after a short period of time.

NEW TECHNIQUES In this highly competitive business new techniques are constantly being worked out by paving firms to improve their operations, so they can still construct quality driveways, and still remain in the competitive price ranges.

"One method used to keep costs down is to bunch the work into one area of the city at a time," Mr. Whitehead said.

"This allows our equipment to move to the next job as soon as each individual unit has completed its particular function in the building of a driveway."

Professional crew with adequate equipment built Langford driveway to highway.

Driveway Construction Is No Job for Amateurs

By JIM BRAHAM

With Greater Victoria residents owning 61,203 automobiles, the residential driveways is considered a necessity by homeowners.

A well constructed driveway not only enhances the entrance to a home, but should remain solid and attractive for many years with only minimum maintenance.

A quality driveway is a major construction job, calling for rigid specifications, skilled workmen, and the use of expensive equipment, such as bulldozers, graders, and trucks equipped with graders.

It is not a task for the amateur, or the fly-by-night operator. An unethical operator may lay an asphalt driveway directly on the topsoil without the average homeowner being aware he has paid for a poorly constructed piece of work, which is doomed to failure within a few months.

Auction Prices Soar

By FAITH ANGUS

Prices of plate number blocks of the 1901-23 period went well beyond catalogue for many lots in the sale of United States 20th century stamps held by Harner, Roche & Co. Inc., New York, Mar. 24-25. The entire sale realized approximately $35,000.

A superb mint set of 250 Zeppelin singles sold for $255, believed to be a record high at auction. A set of Zepp plate blocks was bid up to $2,150. A fine White Planes sheet fetched $82 (catalogue $77.50).

A Jamestown 5c plate block of 12 with imprint and arrow went to $600 against a catalogue figure of $320. Most of the air-mail plate blocks of the first two issues went above catalogue. The 1918 6c block of eight, $140 (cat. $127); the 15c block of eight, $250 (cat. $213).

Over-catalogue bidding began with a roll of 1,000 of the 3c coil of 1917 (No. 494), which realized $470 (cat. $450). It continued into the section of plate blocks and plain blocks of four. Examples:

Pan-American Exposition 4c plate block of six, $180 (cat. $135); 5c plate block of 12, $250 (cat. $210); 10c plate block of eight, $220 (cat. $217). The 1902-01 5c (No. 394) plate block of six, $45 (cat. $42.50). A 15c plate block of the 1918-17 perf. 10 issue, $270 (cat. $225); a block of four of the 1928-34 2c, type 11 (No. 534A), $170 (cat. $90). The 1904 10c special delivery in block of four, $220 (cat. $170).

Parcel post lots did well. A set of 1c to 7c brought $77.50 (cat. $67.50). A plate block of six of the 1c made $400 ($330). Among the 250 lots of full and

Sale of Canadian-Made Cars In U.S. Costly Experiment

By HUGH WINSON
TORONTO (TNS) — Ford of Canada's program of shipping Canadian-made Falcons, Comets and Fairlanes to the U.S. could be a $100,000-a-month market experiment.

Part of the cost of the experiment is a 6 1/2 per cent U.S. duty which Ford must pay now, but which will be refunded if and when the plan is ratified by the U.S. Congress.

The company confirmed it was selling about 400 cars a month in the Buffalo area. And the move raises most of the questions surrounding the Canadian-U.S. car deal.

One of the significant long-term goals of the plan is re-organization of Canadian car production to make it more efficient.

Presently similar cars made in Canada cost between $20 and $40 more than their Detroit counterparts. And the car companies quite rightly point out that most of that results from the higher cost of manufacturing cars in Canada. More expensive parts and low-volume production runs are the chief rogues.

In the two months since the Pearson-Johnson agreement was signed, Ford has not significantly altered its methods of producing Canadian cars.

COMPANY DEAL
Why then are they shipping cars to Buffalo to sell at U.S. prices?

A Ford of Canada spokesman described the deal this way: "Ford of Canada is selling to Ford Motor Co. whose dealers are marketing the cars at a competitive price."

One explanation might be that the company was trying to improve its Canadian production to Canadian sales, one of the provisions of the car agreement which has caught Ford flat-footed.

The success of the imported Mustang has so distorted Ford's sales ratio that even under the new "free trade" agreement it must pay duty on every one of them.

TWO PER CENT
But the company also points out that "total volume of units in this program is not sufficient to affect the ratio." The 400 cars a month equal less than two per cent of the total Canadian output.

Thus it would seem that the company is just dipping its toes into the market to feel the temperature.

One of the impediments in the car deal has been U.S. acceptance of Canadian-made cars.

AS RELIABLE?
Will the average driver believe that our model is just as reliable and just as well made as a home-built product? Or might he spurn the Canadian product because it is "unpatriotic?"

These are some of the questions all of the Big Three want answered before committing themselves to large-scale manufacturing in Canada for the U.S. customer.

Studebaker, of course, assembles in Canada for the U.S. market but there are no many other factors affecting its flagging U.S. sales that it is not a good test.

Stevens should be allowed to keep his license.

One of them, Alexander Edgeworth, HMC's manager, also had his license suspended in Equilmak court for 12 months.

Edgeworth, involved in a rear-end collision early Saturday on Equilmak Road, told police he had drunk five large glasses of beer and one glass of rye.

The other man was Ernest Stevens, 3721 Qandra, stopped by city police early Saturday after he was seen to cross a centre line four times in a distance of three blocks.

He told police he had drunk "quite a few beers."

Magistrate Harold Alder ordered a pre-sentence report in city court to decide whether

All Sooke Day Expands

By BOB PETHICK
Optimistic officials of this year's All Sooke Day celebration committee have almost tripled standing room for the big day July 10.

Close to 10,000 yards of hill have been brought in and formed into a grassy bank so more than 3,000 spectators can have a good view of the proceedings. The 1,000 seats have not been altered.

Also in the cards is more prize money although exact amounts are not yet known.

SPAR TREE MOVED
Main changes include moving the 80-foot spar tree into the centre of the arena to give spectators a better view.

New events are being studied but the official said it was a little early to give details.

The All Sooke Day Association sponsors ball teams, swimming classes and maintains the community hall. Last year $2,500 was raised on the big day.

Sooke has always been able to brag about the good weather on the day of celebration. In 26 years officials were only left with red faces on one occasion. Leading attractions on the bill, footed antics in log birling.

Amazing Leafs Tie Up Seattle Series

Leafs' Fred Hucul confronts Guyle Fielder

Keenan Sparks Victoria Club Playoff Clincher Set Tonight

By ERIC WESSELY
Victoria Maple Leafs, once almost counted out of the Western Hockey League semi-final playoff series when they fell three games to one behind the Seattle Totems in the best-of-seven series, forced a sudden-death game in Seattle tonight with a 2-1 victory before 3,641 fans at Memorial Arena last night, tying the round 3-3.

Centre Larry Keenan did just about everything but clean the ice between periods as he paced a determined Victoria club that refused to quit.

Keenan scored the first goal, set up the second, by Steve Witluk, checked Seattle's Gule Fielder to a standstill, killed penalties and lured Totems into a couple of needless penalties. Goalkeeper Al Millar, receiving excellent support from his defence, successfully blocked Barlow had a perfect pass put on his stick by Leafs Sandy Hucul and he beat Millar with a short, quick shot to Millar's right.

NEUTIC FINISH

This goal set the stage for a hectic finish, with Totems striving desperately to penetrate the Leafs defence, only to be turned back by the equally desperate Victoria club.

McLeod made a good stop at 14:30 on Witluk, who broke in on the right wing, and Millar saved the game with less than three minutes to go with a terrific stop on a slap shot by defenceman Gord Sinclair.

ON BENCH

With McLeod on the bench for an extra attacker in the final minute, Keenan broke up a Seattle play at the Totems' blueline, worked in with Lou Jankowski, passed to the latter, who hit the goalpost.

Strangely enough, while Seattle's line of Bill MacFarland, Holmes and Jean Marie Cossette was Totems' best, the unit they played against, Jankowski, John Smeaver and Gord Redahl, also played a strong game. It was end-to-end hockey when they were on the ice.

TOUGH TIMES

Both teams had to play two men short for more than a minute during the second period. First it was the Leafs, with Labrosse and Dick Lamoureux drawing penalties at 2:05 and 2:52, Totems' turn came when Sinclair and Gerry Leonard drew penalties at 4:28 and 5:13, respectively.

Jean Falls Flat

Nervous? Who was nervous? Well, Jean Marie Cossette, the Seattle winger for one. He stepped out onto the ice for a pre-game warmup and fell flat because he had neglected to remove his skate guards.

Leafs fly to Seattle this morning. If they win, they open the best-of-seven final in Portland Wednesday. The remaining dates are the subject of considerable debate. Stay tuned.

Not just the Totems and their fans were counting on a game with Portland tonight. Several of the Backrooms and their coach Hal Layton showed up in Seattle Friday night, planning on a Saturday workout before playing Totems tonight in Seattle.

That series was to have started in Seattle even though Portland finished first in the league standings. It was only chance for a big game as the Totems have to vacate the Sports Coliseum (cap. 12,000) and play future playoff games in their old ice arena (cap. 4,000) because of a housing show. But Leafs may solve that problem for them.

The game's first goal, at the 50-second mark of the second period, caught most of the fans, and McLeod, by surprise.

Keenan took a slap at a sliding puck at the Seattle blueline and the puck headed goal-ward. McLeod appeared to lose sight of it, and, at first, it appeared to be going over the net. Suddenly, the puck changed direction, started to drop and caromed off the cross-bar into the net.

HUSTLE PAYS

It was Keenan's hustle that paid off for the second goal, late in the second period. He grabbed the puck in his own zone, carried to Seattle territory, passed to Rolfe Wilcox, took the return pass, slid the puck out front, and Witluk backhanded it between McLeod's legs.

Ortiz Loses Fight Title

PANAMA CITY (UPI)—Hometown favorite Ismael Laguna of Panama is the new world lightweight boxing champion. Laguna won the title Saturday night by gaining a split 15-round decision over Carlos Ortiz at Panama City.

A sellout crowd cheered dramatically as Laguna was awarded the title. Two officials voted for the Panamanian, while a third called the fight a draw.

Ortiz was making the fifth defence of his crown that he won from Joe Brown in 1962.

Canadiens Back in Front On Rousseau's Slapshot

MONTREAL (CP)—Bobby Rousseau fired the winning goal for the second time in the playoffs Saturday night as Montreal Canadiens downed Toronto Maple Leafs 3-1 to take a three-two lead in their best-of-seven Stanley Cup semi-final.

A Forum crowd of 15,187 saw Rousseau break up a 3-1 tie at 7:30 of the final period with a blistering 50-foot slapshot that shattered Johnny Bower's goalstick en route to the netting.

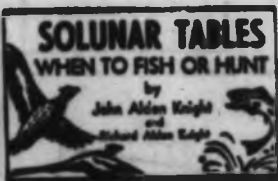

Rousseau also beat Bower for the winning goal in Canadiens' 3-2 victory in the series opener, Montreal also won the second game in Montreal 3-1, but dropped games by 3-2 and 4-3 scores in Toronto.

The teams now head back to Toronto with the Leafs facing a win-or-lose situation. If they can take the sixth game Tuesday night, a seventh and final contest will be played in Montreal Thursday.

Rookie Yves Cournoyer and captain Jean Beliveau were the other Montreal scorers, while centre Bob Pulford counted Toronto's lone marker.

Beliveau's goal came into an empty net with only 44 seconds left to play. Leafs had pulled Bower in a bid for the tying goal, only to see it backfire, just as it did on Montreal in last Thursday's fifth game in Toronto.

Toronto looked as if they might do it when Pulford sent them to the front at 3:45 of the second period. It was an odd goal, only to see it backfire, just as it did on Montreal in last Thursday's fifth game in Toronto.

Starts Friday

Bowling Bonspiel Draws 96 Rinks

At least 96 rinks, the total a few hours before the midnight deadline, will take part in the second annual Vancouver Island Tenpin Bonspiel.

Cosponsored by The Daily Colonist and Mayfair Lanes, the bonspiel will be held at Mayfair next weekend with the first draw scheduled for 10:30 Friday morning. Bowlers will play through four events offering a guaranteed $1,240 in cash prizes as well as $700 in merchandise prizes over the Easter weekend, with finals set for Monday night, April 19.

What's New? Coach Lew

A new coach, new faces and a lengthier schedule are making things interesting in the Victoria Junior Shamrocks camp.

Shamrocks, one of four clubs in the Junior Inter-City Lacrosse League, continue their pre-season workouts this morning at Stevenson Park, starting at 10:30, under new coach Lew Landess.

A former star with the senior Shamrocks, who also practices at Stevenson Park this morning, Landess guided the Saanich Employees' Association team to the British Columbia juvenile "A" championship the past two seasons.

Several graduates of the juvenile club are expected to line up with Shamrocks in their 24-game schedule against defending champion New Westminster, South Vancouver Legion and Cowichan, which has taken over the former Burnaby franchise. Junior Shamrocks open their home schedule on May 4 at Memorial Arena.

Garden Notes

Via Paris with Love

By M. V. CHESTNUT, FRMS

Away back last month when our Colonist girls were quietly going mad trying to keep up with your requests for sweet pea seeds, I told you I would have some more interesting seeds for you before the planting season was over. These have now arrived from France, and believe it or not, these are seeds of an Egyptian weed!

Mind you, I use the word "weed" in the sense that this plant grows wild in Egypt, not that it is invasive or troublesome or unattractive. In fact, this North African wildflower so charmed the hearts of the people of Paris that they named it Mignonette — Little Darling!

Mignonette is not what you might call a dramatically beautiful plant, nor is it particularly showy, for its flowers are small, reddish or greenish-gold in color, and massed on a spike about a foot tall.

Its charm and its popularity lie primarily in its fragrance, which is strong and hauntingly exciting. And unlike most of the highly scented flowers, it yields its fragrance both by day and through the hours of darkness. A small patch of mignonette planted beneath an open bedroom window can make one's nights a perfumed delight.

The French, who took mignonette to their hearts soon after its discovery in Egypt, have done a lot of development work on the plant, not all of it with happy results. For instance, one breeder succeeded in creating a mignonette with flowers over twice as big as the ordinary kinds, but something was lost in the making.

The new Goliath mignonette was still sweetly scented, but the scent had lost its oomph and zing, and was about as exciting as the baby's talcum powder. As one famous French perfume put it, the flower had lost its sex appeal.

The hybridizers were quick to correct this condition — trust a Frenchman to put sex back into fragrance — and new strains were introduced in which the sense-stimulating factors were strengthened.

Acres of these flowers are grown in the perfume producing district of Grasse where their essence is distilled to create these expensive perfumes with exotic names featured in the advertising columns of the slick magazines.

These, then, are the seeds I have for you — seeds of a superior strain of fragrant mignonette — and even though they are scarce and horribly expensive, I think I have a big enough supply to provide a sample of about 100 seeds for each of my gardening friends who would like to grow this beloved French flower.

For those newcomers who may not be familiar with the Colonist free seed offers, all you do to get a packet of these seeds is drop me a line asking for them, enclosing a stamped and self-addressed envelope. If you are too busy to write a letter, you can clip and send in the request coupon at the foot of this column instead.

Next week I'll give some pointers on how to start to grow these seeds, and I suggest you clip and save these how-to-do-it columns until you have your fragrant mignonette plants safely launched.

JACK SMITH in Throes of Feminine Mystique

Housewife for a Day

Now that the boys are weaned, I turned on television. It was Truth or Consequences. I watched it a while and then turned it off, unutterably depressed. I was overcome by a sense of unfulfillment.

I felt like a housewife. I opened the garage door so she could back the car out. "What time will you be home?" I asked her.

"About 5:30, I guess. Why?" "Oh, you know. So I can have dinner ready, and all that."

She drove off down the hill without comment. I went back in the house and did the breakfast dishes. I read the paper for a while. I made the bed. I went into the living room and just sat for a while, staring at the walls.

I was about to get dressed and go down to a cafe when the doorbell rang. It was a young lady with a sales case. She took a step backward when I opened the door. One eyebrow lifted. "Is Mrs. ... Uh ... Mrs. ... Smith?" "Yes, is Mrs. Smith in?" "No," I said. "She works."

Her other eyebrow went up.

"Oh, I work too," I explained. "I'm off today. You want to come in?"

She paled. I realized I had said the wrong thing. "I'll just, uh, leave my card," she said, "and come back ... when Mrs. Smith's home."

After she left I got to wondering. What do housewives do when young salesmen come to the door. Invite them in? I realized it was a little late in life to be worrying about that.

I tidied up the house. Then I showered and dressed and combed my hair. It made me feel a little better. I found some leftover chicken and made a sandwich.

I read McCall's for a while, to see what the hell it is they read. Then I turned on TV again and watched Tarzan and the Leopard Lady. That Johnny Weissmuller was great.

She got home at 5:45. "Where've you been?" I asked. "Where have I been? What do you mean where have I been?" "I mean you're late. You stop for a drink?"

"No I didn't stop for a drink," she said. "It was the traffic. Terrible."

She took off her shoes and sank into a chair. "Anything new?" "The auto insurance bill came," I said. "You aren't going to like it."

She groaned. I began mixing a pot of martinis. She looked as if she could use one.

ART BUCHWALD Looks at Spy Business

Agent 8½ Does It Again

WASHINGTON.—Industrial espionage or the art of spying on other American companies has become a multi-million dollar business. A recent Harvard Business Review survey revealed that industrial espionage was discovered by 27 per cent of all the companies interviewed and every-one admitted it was on the increase.

It opens up a whole new world for spies. Harvey Sickles, agent 8½, is having tea with his superior, Mr. X.

"8½, this could be your most dangerous case. The Coldfinger Capsule Co. has just perfected a new pill that will give people six months of relief from one cold. The Impact Pill people have to have the formula or they'll be destroyed. I don't care how you get the secret, but I want it here by Monday."

"I've got you, chief." "Be careful, 8½. Coldfinger's a killer. He has a nose spray that is worse than anything they've been using in Viet Nam."

The next evening Sickles arrives at the apartment of Miss Mairry Doats, a luscious, posing blonde intimate of the famous spy.

Sickles takes her in his arms. "Don't kiss me, darling. I've got a cold," she says huskily.

"Why do you think I'm here?" Sickles says, before pressing his lips on hers.

He kisses her for a full minute. Mairry Doats swoons. "Let me get into something more comfortable."

"I can't, baby," Sickles says sneezing. "I'm on a case."

He leaves the perplexed Mairry Doats on the couch, jumps into his Aston-Martin, and drives to the laboratory of the Coldfinger Capsule Co. A light is on in the laboratory and Dr. Felicia Oomph is bent over her microscope.

Sickles enters and the doctor, startled, looks up. "What do you want?"

"I'm a man and you're a woman," Sickles says, not wanting to frighten her. "I want to ask you one question, doctor. Have you ever been kissed by a man, really kissed?"

The doctor takes off her glasses and she's beautiful. "No, I never have. I'm afraid of men."

"Why?" "Because of their germs. Men carry around millions and millions of germs."

"But I love you," Sickles says. "I love you, too," Dr. Oomph says, pressing his hand. "But you've got a cold and I'm afraid."

"Perhaps you could give me something for it, and then I could kiss you."

"The only thing I have is CHOPIN. It won't cure the cold, but it will give you instant relief. Here, take one now and one every six months."

"Thank you, Felicia. Gosh, I feel like a new man."

"You can kiss me now," Dr. Oomph says.

He kisses her. Then he pretends to blow his nose. The ordinary handkerchief is a secret radio transmitter and Sickles broadcasts the formula to Mr. X.

Dr. Oomph starts taking off her smock, but Mr. X says, "Return immediately, 8½. We need you on a toothpaste case right away."

New Election Facing Irish?

DUBLIN (AP) — A dispute over votes by mental patients and recounts in two districts pushed Ireland's parliamentary election stalemate further into confusion Saturday night.

Only one thing was certain: Prime Minister Sean Lemass will be able to form a government. But among many Irishmen there is a feeling there will have to be another election soon, perhaps in the fall.

Lemass' Fianna Fail party has captured 72 seats in the 144-seat Dail (parliament) from Wednesday's balloting and the combined opposition and independents together hold 70.

One of the seats Lemass' party won is in dispute and a recount is in progress to decide the two undecided seats in Dublin.

It appears now that one seat here will go to the Fine Gael party and one to the Irish Labor party. If things go that way it will balance parliament exactly—72 to the Fianna Fail and 72 to the combined opposition.

Minister's Widow Dies at 85

A Victoria resident of three decades, Mrs. Beattie A. Farrell, 85, of 905 McClure Street, died early Saturday in St. Joseph's Hospital.

Mrs. Farrell, who had been in failing health for the past two years, was the widow of Rev. Allen C. Farrell, who died here in 1946.

She was born Beattie Arlene Lingham in Belleville, Ont., in 1880 and was educated at Albert College, Belleville, and Victoria College, University of Toronto.

LIVED ON PRAIRIES

Before coming to Victoria her husband held several United Church parishes on the Prairies.

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. T. R. Haythorne, of North Surrey; one son, J. A. Farrell, of London, England, and five grandchildren.

The funeral will be held privately and a memorial service will be held at 2 p.m. Wednesday at McCall's Chapel.

Main Afro-Asian Ambition 'Recovery of Self-Respect'

By IAN ARROL

The main concern of most African and Asian nations is not communism versus democracy but recovery from domination—political and intellectual—by people outside their culture.

This is the view of Professor William Dobson, former head of the department of East Asian studies at the University of Toronto and now a senior fellow at Massey College, who was in Victoria to address the annual meeting Saturday night of the University of Toronto Alumni Association, Victoria branch, at the Art Gallery.

"We in North America tend to pre-occupy ourselves with Asians and Africans have a North American environment and intellectual reactions," he said in a Saturday afternoon interview in the Oak Bay Beach Hotel.

"The Asians and Africans want to recover, in their own terms, their nation's self-confidence and self-respect."

This desire of a nation to establish its own identity is seen by the professor as manifest in Communist China's "immense pre-occupation" with the past. "They wish to instill self-respect in being Chinese."

Help can best be given through the United Nations. "The African and Asian nations don't want unilateral help. They just can't believe it is disinterested."

The professor pointed out that in the UN, the Asians and Africans have a voice. "They now form almost a majority. UN sponsorship can assure no strings are attached."

Concerning the situation in Southeast Asia, Mr. Dobson sees a "ray of hope" in that the nations of that area have at least got together in collaborating on technical surveys. He would like to see North and South Viet Nam back at the conference table.

And he feels that Canada could take leadership in the removal of trust and constructive works in the area.

Defeat of Polio 10 Years Old

By JOHN BARBOUR
Associated Press
Remember them now — the bespectacled researcher who injected his own family first, the respected university professor who carefully weighed the evidence and kept the secret, the virus that once struck summer-time fear into North American homes?

Monday morning, April 12, marks 10 years to the day when a blue-ribbon medical panel pronounced the verdict on the Salk polio vaccine:

"It is safe, effective and potent."

GREATEST CAMPAIGN

And in just 10 years one of the greatest medical campaigns in history has virtually obliterated polio from the North American scene.

When an epidemic hit a community, iron lungs would be rushed in by airplane. Teams of doctors and nurses would flock to tiny, overcrowded hospitals.

TO KILL VIRUS

There was word from the University of Pittsburgh that a doctor named Jonas Salk had been working with ways to kill the virus with formaldehyde and use the killed virus as a vaccine—stimulating the body to produce antibodies. The body's defenses could be made to produce antibodies.

WOULD IT WORK?

But would the vaccine really work? It needed a wide field trial. A team of American scientists set it up. They enrolled U.S. Public Health officials in several states. Some 1,830,000 youngsters received injections—some of it vaccine, some of it a harmless material. To head the evaluation, there was Dr. Thomas Francis, Jr., of the University of Michigan.

It was a mammoth job. The public pressure was enormous. It finally became so bad, Francis retreated to his home and was reported to have refused to answer his telephone.

Salk

trying to write the report on the vaccine.

Finally, that April morning, Francis read the good news. Salk had indeed an effective weapon against polio.

Mass vaccination began. Then later, there was another vaccine—this one using a weakened but living virus, prepared by Dr. Albert Sabin of the University of Cincinnati. Between the two vaccines, polio was licked.

Last year, there were only 121 cases over the entire U.S. In the 10 years before the Salk vaccine, the disease had killed some 57,000 persons and crippled 500,000 others.

La Belle Otero Dies in Poverty

NICE, France — The last of the great Paris nightlife queens of the Gay Nineties, Caroline Otero, has died in poverty. She was 96.

Once dripping in diamonds and pearls, she died in a tiny room by the railroad tracks — years behind in her rent. Neighbors said she kept with her a packet of Czarist bonds worth millions before the Bolshevik revolution made them worthless.

Known as "La Belle Otero" when she danced with kings, princes and industrial magnates, she is best remembered as the subject of a poster by famed artist Toulouse-Lautrec. Reproductions of the poster hang in many places around the world.

Windblown Anne

BADMINTON, England — Flonzie Princess Anne won a $351 first prize in her first show-jumping success here. The 14-year-old princess took the seven fences in the novice working pony class competition at the Badminton horse trials in this southern England town.

LOS ANGELES — Louis Armstrong, just back from a tour of Communist-dominated countries, says he couldn't find the Iron Curtain. "I didn't see no curtain the whole time I was over there," he told reporters. "Where do they keep it? Pops, them cats are no different than we are. And they dig our music — every note. They have more of my records than you cats do."

VATICAN CITY — Pope Paul VI will lead the world's 500,000,000 Roman Catholics into the solemn pre-Easter rituals of Holy Week today when he blesses palm reeds in the Sistine Chapel. From Palm Sunday until he gives his Easter blessing to the city of Rome and the world — on April 12, the Pontiff will move about Rome to take part in ceremonies recalling Christ's last days before His crucifixion.

BOONVILLE, Mo. — A mother and her son, driving in different cars from opposite directions, died in a head-on collision with each other Friday night. Dead are Mrs. Martha Boren, 57, and Donald Wayne Boren, 22.

SEE-BOR-DE-MER, France — The Belgian Foreign Minister, Paul-Henri Spaak, 66, is to be married at this Riviera village during the Easter holidays, a member of the municipal council said, adding Mr. Spaak will marry divorcee Mrs. Blanche Deane, 50, whom he met during the Second World War.

ALGIERS — Berber Chieftain Hocine Ah Ahmed was found guilty of treason by a tribunal and sentenced to die. The tribunal also pronounced the death sentence on Ah Ahmed's close collaborator, Ahmed Ben Mohamed, the so-called commander of the anti-government front of socialist forces.

JAKARTA — Communist North Korean Premier Kim Il Sung arrived here for a week-long state visit, but apparent ill health may cause him to curtail his program.

PARIS — Hard-line Communist Valerian Zorin, former Soviet deputy foreign minister and an expert on German affairs, has presented his credentials to President de Gaulle to become the new Soviet ambassador to France in what some see as the opening of a diplomatic offensive on Germany.

WASHINGTON — West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt will meet with President Johnson at the White House. West German officials said that Brandt, who will visit Washington with Christian Democratic Party deputy chairman Fritz Erbe, will arrive for talks with top administration officials, including Secretary of State Dean Rusk.

Flower Festival Opens

Queen Marlene Reigns

By TONY DILLON-DAVIS

With the skill of bagpipers and a fanfare from the III Winds band, blonde Marlene Dodsworth, 2088 Paul Bay Road, became queen of Victoria's Spring Flower Festival Saturday.

Marlene became queen twice. The first time was at Mayfair shopping centre, where she was chosen Mayfair Queen by a team of judges.

Happy Smile

There were no tears, just a happy smile that the waiting was over.

Marguerite Smith, 114 Wildwood, and Adele Smith, 248 Michigan, are princesses. Marlene was crowned by last year's queen, Jan Laidlaw.

To Square

After the ceremonies, the new queen travelled to Centennial Square for her coronation as flower festival queen.

Decked out in top hat and tails, Ed MacFayden, chairman of the Chamber of Commerce festival queen committee, presented the queen's sceptre of office to Mayor Wilken.

The mayor turned over the sceptre to Marlene to make her queenship official.

Special Guest

A visitor to the coronation was 17-year-old Donna Bigman from Skagway, Alaska, this year's fourteenth Queen, on her first trip to B.C.

Donna is special guest of the Chamber during the festival.

Next week Seattle's Sea-fair Queen Geraldine LePenske will join Marlene and Donna to take part in some of the festival events.

Busy Schedule

Meanwhile Marlene has a packed schedule ahead of her. Today she visits the Japanese inter-car club rodeo being held from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Town and Country shopping centre before attending an interdenominational church service at 3 p.m. in Centennial Square.

Monday she'll visit CHEK-TV, Queen Alexandra Soldiers' Veterans' Hospital and a Rotary district meeting.

Opens Revue

Wednesday she'll tour Mason Lodge and Mount St. Mary's Hospital as well as opening Fred Usher's Daffodil Revue at the McPherson Playhouse both Wednesday and Thursday.

Good Friday will be a day off but Saturday she'll make brief appearances at the children's parade, Empress fashion show, international fly-in and the Boatman's Ball.

Victoria florists donated $400 worth of flowers to the Cystic Fibrosis Society, for decorations at the charity ball in the Empress Hotel Saturday night, the first major event in the Spring Flower Festival.

Today's Events

10 a.m.—Inter-car club rodeo, Town and Country Shopping Centre.

3 p.m.—Interdenominational church service, Centennial Square.

Monday's Events

2 p.m.—Bus tour leaves Centennial Square.

Two Injured

Smash Sends Car Into Wall

Two people were admitted to hospital late Saturday night after a two-car accident that sent one reeling into a road-side wall of rock on Trans-Canada Highway near Wilkinson.

Living Grey Persists

Some innocent Prairie residents are still watching black-and-white television and wondering when a former Victoria man is going to change it to color.

The Better Business Bureau in Victoria says advertisements were placed in weekly newspapers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, asking residents to send $1 to a promoter here who would give them color viewing.

BBC claimed the promoter offered to send colored screens to prairie people, and they sent in their dollars.

Car Hits Pole Damage $1,000

Damage totalling about $1,000 was the result when a car smashed into a B.C. Hydro pole Saturday morning on West Saanich Road, Saanich police said.

Driver James Edward Morgan, 18, of 575 Verdier, was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital after the accident, which sheared the pole. He was released after treatment.

Elderly Cyclist Injured in Fall

Police said William Henry, 83 Howe, suffered a fractured shoulder, cuts and shock.

New Minister Arrives July 1

Rev. Marvin G. Fowler of Acme, Alberta, will arrive in Victoria July 1 to be associate minister to Rev. Robert J. D. Morris of First United, church officials announced Saturday.

Victorian Aboard

Hope Fades For Crew Of Fishboat

Hope faded Saturday for a Victorian, a former Nanaimo man and six other members of the crew of the Vancouver-based fishboat Sea Ranger that sank off the Aleutians.

They are William J. Henry, whose mother lives at 1206 Fairfield, and William McCullough, formerly of Nanaimo. Mr. McCullough's home is now in Vancouver.

Officials of an air-sea search said there is little hope any of the men aboard the 67-foot craft survived.

RAFT FOUND
An eight-man inflatable life raft was found floating in the water Thursday night by the U.S. Coast Guard. The coast guard checked with transport officials here and learned that this was not the life raft registered to Sea Ranger. This gave rise to reports that a second raft was aboard Sea Ranger.

Charles Martin, an official of a Vancouver shipyard, said today the raft registered to Sea Ranger—a six-man raft—was removed in Vancouver recently and replaced with the eight-man raft. He said the vessel had only one raft aboard when it left Vancouver for the halibut grounds.

PART OF GALLEY
The raft was found along with an eight-foot chunk of rowboat and part of a galley wall and pilot house.

The other missing men were identified as J. McChere Carter of Vancouver, the owner; Capt. Matt Spelman of North Surrey; Karl Ostergaard and August Seeshja, all of Vancouver; Ragnar Soreng of North Vancouver, and Kenneth McAlpin of Jordan Bay, N.E.

Four planes and four surface vessels were criss-crossing 3,500 square miles of ocean Saturday in search of the Sea Ranger.

Island Hydro Chief Replies

Gas Money-Loser

B.C. Hydro's gas operation in Greater Victoria is a losing proposition, Vancouver Island manager L. E. Wight said Saturday.

It is unfair to compare gas operations here and on the Lower Mainland, he said.

DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Wight was commenting on charges by Victoria restaurant owners that Hydro is discriminating against local gas consumers.

The Victoria-Vancouver Island branch of the Canadian Restaurant Association is preparing a brief for Hydro showing Victoria restaurants are paying twice as much for gas as their Vancouver counterparts.

Mr. Wight said he wouldn't comment specifically on the brief, expected to be presented by the end of the month.

However, he did say that, since gas has to be shipped here while it is readily available in Vancouver, prices could never be equal.

Victoria consumers use butane while natural gas is burned in Vancouver.

"It's like comparing apples and oranges," Mr. Wight said.

Meanwhile, Victoria's Social M.L.A. J. Donald Smith has promised he would help the restaurant men.

Instructor, Student

Speed, Know-How Save Boy's Life

Quick thinking by a physical education instructor and a student who learned emergency procedures in a cadet group were credited Saturday with saving the life of 15-year-old Harvey Eckert Thursday.

A freak accident in a gymnasium at Esquimalt Junior High handed a medical team of four a tense three-hour job trying to save the boy's life.

STORY TOLD

Donald Smith, principal of the school, said the fast reaction to the accident of physical education instructor Allan Metcalfe and student Norman Bressault undoubtedly saved Harvey from bleeding to death.

Mr. Smith told the story of the accident Saturday.

He said 35 students were involved in a game of floor hockey supervised by Mr. Metcalfe.

Harvey, one of the players, was running after the play when he ran into double doors in the wall of the gym.

His stick caught in the bottom of the double-doors, ramming the butt into his thigh.

It ripped a vein and an artery. He immediately began losing a massive amount of blood.

RAN ACROSS FLOOR

"Harvey apparently panicked. He ran across the floor," said Mr. Smith. "The instructor had to throw him to the floor to save him."

The principal said he arrived on the scene about a minute later, and the instructor and Norman Bressault were attending the injured boy.

"They had found the pressure points, and had momentarily stopped the bleeding," said Mr. Smith.

POLICE PRAISED

Mr. Smith praised Esquimalt police who were on the scene moments after they were notified.

The boy's heart stopped for two minutes while he was in emergency at St. Joseph's. He received 14 pints of blood at the hospital, replacing almost every drop of blood in his body.

Mrs. Ervin Eckert, 476 Lamson, said Saturday Harvey is "doing very well" in hospital.

Two Pools Dip-Dyed

Color Them Choleric

"We don't know who did it but we'd like to break his neck," a spokesman for the management of the Bickerton Court apartment block at 250 Douglas said Saturday—and his face was reddening.

His colorful language came after a color-removal artist tried his skill overnight Friday on two city outdoor pools. Police said an unidentified prankster poured red dye into the outdoor swimming pool at the Redwood Park motel, 141 Gorge, then did the same thing at the opposite end of town at an ornamental waterfall pool in front of the Bickerton Court.

Police weren't brushing the matter off. In fact, they had a clue—a milk carton containing red dye found near the motel pool.

Neither the management at the Bickerton nor the Redwood could suggest any reason for the prank. They could only agree some maroon moron should have his posterior lanced—or reddened.

Riding is the game at Echo Valley Farm

There has always been a lot of interest in horseback riding in and around Victoria. And when Spring rolls around there is a marked increase in activity around local riding establishments.

Out at the C. C. Carpenter's place, Echo Valley Farm near Prospect Lake, there is always something going on. The Carpenters, both widely known in the horse world, are running a semi-private stable.

The Carpenters moved out to Echo Valley about a year ago and have done wonders to the property and low ranch style home atop a slight rise.

There are wide fields, corrals, a ring and a large barn that has been modernized within. An interesting feature of the stalls is that they have iron grating on the doors and iron feed mangers and water troughs from the old Dunsmuir stables at Hatley Park.

Shortly there will be a new assistant instructor, Gillian Dunn, BHSAI, a graduate of Col. Dudgeon's Burton Hall just outside Dublin. If that isn't enough to recommend her, she has recently been two years with Penny Morton, one of Ireland's top dressage riders.

Some of the top horses of the district have passed through the Carpenters' hands. Most of these are now living in California. There was Ky Blue, a reserve green hunter champion at Santa Barbara a few weeks ago; Victory's Tifara, winner of a three-day event at Inverness, Calif.; Cimota, a reserve hunter champion, and Sky Bingo, an outstanding open jumper, to name a few.

shall with Nanette. Gail Brownrig, who has been acting as instructor at Echo Valley, rode from Winnipeg to Calgary last fall and will be leaving shortly for Calgary to make the return journey across Canada.

C. C. Carpenter, owner of Echo Valley Farm, is pictured with, from left to right, Anna Tye up on Phillips, Kim Mills on Flicka, Suzie Lund on Skippy, Peggie Angus on Paddy Cake and Debbie MacDonald on Wilmount Lass. Wilmount Lass, who came from Ireland, is a Connemara and gained a lot of fame across the country when she had her first foal.

Swing along in pleats . . .

That's how we feel about pleated skirts with their great comfort and crisp feeling of motion . . . This week at Wilson's we saw two stunning suits in which pleats are beautifully handled . . . Both of the same material . . . men's wear gleam plaid woven in a blue and grey combination . . . one with all-round pleated skirt, the other an A-line skirt with side pleats, straight back . . . double-breasted jacket with squared-off collar . . . Sizes 10 and 12 respectively . . . An English cosmetics firm has come up with a line of beauty products designed for African Negroes. Rouge is said to be especially becoming.

Stepping out smartly in the Easter Parade . . .

Another good fashion beloved of smart women the world over is the plain classic pump . . . a superb example of which you'll find at Munday's in their new line of Mr. Easton shoes. This particular style is called "Vanity" . . . soft supple kid-skin inside and out . . . Nary a hint of trim or other distraction . . . no sharp points or angles . . . just beautiful curves from its rolled top, gracefully curving heel, to its rounded toe . . . As the French say, "plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose" . . . meaning that a brand new silhouette has served to enhance a favorite shoe fashion . . . two heel heights . . . one illusion, the other slightly lower, but both so artfully shaped that they look higher . . . And the light pastel colors for spring are lovely . . . there's a luscious raspberry shade, lemon yellow, true blue, red, chamois (which is another name for beige) . . . and sparkling black patent . . . ## Best fashion assortment in town . . .

No matter what style or color of dress you've got your heart set on . . . chances are 99 to 100 you'll find it at Miss Frith's. A natural linen line, smooth linen striped 2-piece . . . well tailored and elegantly simple, costs but $25 . . . Two hot pink linen dresses here straight from New York . . . We're telling you all this to prove that while Miss Frith's carry some quite expensive fashions, there are plenty of lovely and well-chosen styles with very modest price tags . . . ## Canadian maple to live with . . .

While scouting The Gallery at Home Furniture Company a few days ago, a sign caught our eye, so we fitted upstairs to inspect the Colonial Maple Shop . . . Completely different atmosphere, but very beguiling! . . . Furniture equally attractive, in its way, but more informal . . . "homier". If you know what we mean . . . This is very top quality maple by Vlas . . . Bedroom and dining room suites . . . all sorts of tables and bookcases . . . dresser and hutch type buffets . . . a series of wall and bookcase units containing shelves, drawers and cabinets which would be perfect in a den . . . Newly arrived this past week, about 20 lovely upholstered chairs with maple frames . . . gay patchwork covers or colonial prints . . . Among them are rockers, swivel rockers and plain (as opposed to rocker) types. All wonderfully comfortable . . . Home Furniture Company, 525 Fort St., 382-5128.

Fragrant years . . .

You've probably read about that new scented paper to line drawers and cupboards . . . made in France by that very famous perfumer, Lubin . . . maybe you've tried to buy it, to no avail . . . Well, we're happy to tell you it's available in Victoria now . . . at one place only, Douglas Pharmacy . . . called Sachet Paper, it comes in big sheets rolled in a tube . . . is printed in the attractive dark blue and white toile design which was the favorite of Marie Antoinette . . . impregnated with Nuit de Longchamp perfume, and holds its scent for months and months . . . Freshly a luxury item and one every truly feminine woman will want to line her linen drawer with . . . makes everything smell heavenly! . . . (Nice thought for an Easter gift, too) . . . Costs 95¢ . . . Still on the subject of Lubin's Nuit de Longchamp, Douglas Pharmacy also have a special on at the moment . . . a good-sized bottle of cologne, along with a small bottle of perfume . . . $7.25 value for $4.15 . . . another nice fit item . . . and in case you're not familiar with this delightful scent, it has a true floral fragrance in which jasmine predominates . . . Huge shaggy flowers pinned at the back of your hairdo are much prettier and more sophisticated than last year's overdone bow.

A fine array of Easter goodies . . .

We dropped in to Welch's earlier in the week to see what they were up to for Easter . . . and found the shop a riot of color . . . gray as an Easter Egg . . . which is what they're overflowing with! . . . And WHAT eggs! . . . enveloped in multicolored foils, beflowered and be-ribboned . . . each nestling in its own box, and priced, according to size and elaborateness, from $1.19 to $15 . . . We might add that these eggs are thickly moulded of the finest milk chocolate, and packed full of those wonderful Welch's chocolates and candies . . . Even the small, unboxed eggs contain candies or cream fillings . . . There are chocolate bunnies and chocolate and rabbits in eggshaped bags . . . life to die . . . Bored rabbits $1.78 to $2.75 . . . egg cups made like toy soldiers, or bunny planters $6 . . . Others in the shape of bunnies, roosters and chicks . . . in several colors . . . for 65¢ . . . Pretty mugs of real English china . . . (Needless to say, all these china objects contain chocolate eggs) . . . Then there are exciting-looking Easter baskets priced at $1.50, $2.75 and $3.75 . . . If you're planning on playing Easter Bunny this year, better get to Welch's fast! . . . ## Time to hibernate your furs . . .

Even though the weather man says April promises to be coolish, you most certainly won't be needing your fur coat . . . so it's a smart idea to get it out of the closet where it's now collecting dust, and into storage where it'll be revitalized and safe from moth, dust and indoor heat . . . We took our coat in to Scuby's last Monday . . . and had a quick tour of their ultra-modern fur storage vault . . . It's fireproof, temperature controlled, dust free . . . Furs hang widely spaced, with plenty of cool air circulating around them . . . all in all, the sort of place you can happily entrust your precious furs to . . . What's more, Scuby's . . . being furriers, and not mere storers of garments, give your furs expert and thorough examination before putting them into hibernation . . . they'll tell you if repairs or cleaning are advisable . . . If your coat or jacket could stand a new lining . . . or if you'd like a spot or remodeling . . . even completely new style . . . now's the time to talk to Scuby's about this, too . . . They do a superb job, as we know from personal experience . . . and can quote you lower costs now than would be possible later on in the year . . . Scuby's Furs Limited, 911 Government St., 383-4361.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: For the first time in two years I have found peace of mind. I want to share it with you.

I was one of those foolish women who felt my husband didn't appreciate me, so I wandered. My sweetheart was married, too, but his wife was not well. (Are they ever?) He assured me that when she was stronger and able to accept the blow he would ask for a divorce and we would be married.

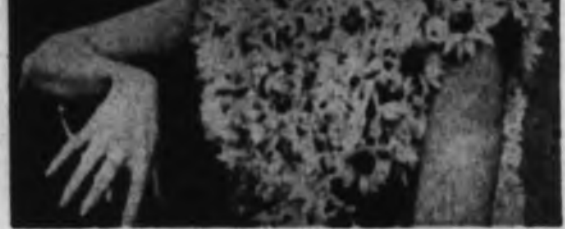

Suddenly his wife died of a heart attack. This put him in an embarrassing position—one which he did not expect. I am sure. He told me he could not ask me to leave my husband and that I should forget him.

His wife has been dead I know for three months and already he has been seen squiring two rich widows and a loaded divorcee. I would like to warn these women to listen for the following phrases: "How sad that we did not meet years ago. We could have had a beautiful life together." Or this one: "I would know your hands anywhere—just by the touch." And of course: "This is the most extraordinary thing that has ever happened to me. It's like a novel!"

So beware, girls. That Dreamboat could be the Heel.—BURNED AND CURED.

Dear B and C: And I hope you will take your own advice, Patricia. Lonely women have a tendency to repeat the same sorry mistakes.

Dear Ann Landers: I am a boy who will soon be 17 years old. I was fed up arguing every time I wanted a couple of bucks so I got myself a job after school and on weekends. This has cut me out of a lot of social activity, but

This striking, marmoset hat and matching bolero in yellow and white was modelled at the recent spring showing of Simone Mirman in London.—(Feldman Photo)

Harry Firth

The Hair on the Head has finished growing, is dead and incapable of improvement.

But Can Be Damaged

Hair roots are the size of a pin-point, have no digestive properties and cannot be nourished by so-called "hair foods" whatever. The average life of each individual hair is from 3 to 4 years, when they naturally drop out and new regresses by a new growth. The hair root absorbs the (Keratin) hairs substance and color (Pigment) from Nature's source the Blood. Hair roots do not die. From the lack of activity, hair roots shrivel and are absorbed.

My exclusive method of "MANEPO-LATITE TREATMENT" is the answer to hair loss. Caused by a lightened state of the tissues. Causing insufficient supply of blood to the hair root. Resulting at the temple, etc. is corrected; this treatment has given ENHANCING SATISFACTION for over 20 years in Victoria, B.C.

Dear Mr. Firth:

This is just a few lines to express to you my appreciation for the very excellent job you have done towards restoring the vigour of my hair and now even some of the color. Last fall when you first started your massage, my hair was getting to a very poor condition and one side of my head very sore, but now following a great deal of patience, the whole situation has improved immeasurably. I am indeed grateful for your perseverance. Thank you.

Yours sincerely,
Lily.

Color Bar Makes Unity

MONTREAL (CP)—The irony of South African apartheid, says sociologist Helen McGill Hughes, is that it has united the natives as nothing else could.

"By permitting the natives to live only in places set apart for them, the Nationalists in South Africa have brought about conditions favorable to the creation of native will and native public opinion," she told the Women's Canadian Club here.

Prize List Posted

Although the CNE is still some months away, now is the time to send for the 1965 Women's Prize List.

Nearly an additional thousand dollars is being given in prizes this year. As well as the regular competitions, two exciting and profitable ones have been added. In the special candle making competition, $525 is being offered in prizes. And here is certainly something new—a knitting competition for tea cosies. First prize is $50, second $25, and third prize $15.

In the handicraft section there are classes for pottery and ceramic sculpture, metal crafts, precious metals, wood carving, leather work and rugs. And in each class there is a special Grand Award for best of class. Quilts continue to be great favorites and there is a special award for best of class.

The hat making competition which has increased in popularity over the past three years will be continued. There are special classes for work of the blind, hospitalized persons and persons over 65 years of age.

In order to obtain the 1965 Prize List, write to Mrs. E. Jenkins, Women's Division, Canadian National Exhibition, Exhibition Park, Toronto 2-B, Ontario.

Young Couple Spend Honeymoon in Banff

Baskets of pink and white spring flowers were at the altar of Metropolitan United Church, Saturday afternoon, when Rev. Albert E. King officiated at the double-ring ceremony that united Daphne June Sluggett and Mr. Bruce Wilfred Corbett in marriage.

Organist Mr. E. Boothroyd played "Because" during the signing of the register.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Sluggett, 6933 West Saanich Road, and the groom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Corbett, 842 Patricia Bay Highway.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a full-length gown of distressed peau de soie, styled with a train, accented with a French rose at back waistline. Swiss lace and seed pearl appliques highlighted the belted skirt and the bodice of the gown. Sleeves ended in lily points. Her chapel length veil mistled from a French organza rose headpiece, and she carried a white Bible, topped with gardenias and freesias. Identical gowns of pale pink peau de soie, covered with belted skirts and lace-covered bodices, were the choice of maid of honor, Miss Karen Robinson, and bridesmaid, Miss Anne Knott, cousin of the bride. A similar gown, highlighted with a lace cummerbund, was worn by junior bridesmaid, Miss Diane Sluggett, another cousin. All wore headpieces of pale pink roses edged with tulle and carried colonial bouquets of pink and white feathered carnations.

Teens Can Help In Many Ways

By KITTE TURMELL

"Why don't you write more about all the good things teenagers do?" challenged David, a youth-club, church-club leader. Many young people are giving time and talent to what have long been called good works. Their efforts may inspire you to do similar work. Easter is the season to remember Jesus' words: "Whatever you do to the least of my brethren you do unto me." Young people are doing much for many! Examples: High school girls, belonging to a "Y"-teen club have welcomed refugees by

- Furnishing a three-bedroom home, from napkins to refrigerator, for a family from Egypt.
- Giving a mother of five her first baby shower.
- Entertaining a Hungarian couple just arrived from behind the Iron Curtain.
- Adopting a newly-arrived family to work with for a year. They taught the mother how to use appliances and cook American foods; aided with holiday dinners; taught children English.

Other good ideas, from this group, include release kits for parolees from women's prisons. Kits contain purse, comb, lipstick, soap, alarm clock. Into treasure chests for girls at a juvenile detention home, "Y"-girls put scarves, writing paper, jewelry. They also visit teen patients at a mental hospital. Members of a parish adopted a missionary and raised money to help pay her fare to Northern Rhodesia, where she works with teen-agers.

To aid the one church overseas program, junior and senior high school students volunteered as toilers, to wash cars, cut lawns, clear attics and collect goods for a sidewalk sale.

A 4-H group toiled to make the outdoors more beautiful by clearing a 40-acre tract for camping, planted pines, pruned trees, chopped bushes to encourage sprout growth for winter food for deer, piled brush to give protective cover for small game.

They work with a purpose, these young people. Many, as in the American Friends Service Committee work camps, observe, each day, a period of silent meditation, a quiet time for thinking about their place and purpose in the world. They are putting into action their belief that "It is better to light a candle than to curse the darkness."

Don't Pierce Your Ears!

NEW YORK — Physicians have been warning teen-age girls not to try to pierce their ears ever since a rumor began that President Johnson's daughter, Luci, had her ears done at the White House.

Girls from coast to coast have been frantically anxiously waiting for word from the White House as to whether or not the president's daughter had pierced her ears.

Many physicians are said to be complaining about being called upon to square up ragged jobs done by do-it-yourselfers. More important, doctors caution that danger of infection is high.

For more ideas for interesting projects, worth your teen-time, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Kitti Turmell, care of this newspaper. Ask for Kitti's new free-leaflet, "Teen Missions."

The Teens Write

Who's Boy Crazy?

"Dear Kitti: I would like to know how much do you have to like boys to be boy crazy?" "Dis-satisfied."

Dear "Dis-satisfied": This is judged by how you talk and act. The girl who's boy crazy phones the boy before he shows any interest in her. She waits for him to call her without waiting to see if he'll walk past her. And she hails a friendly, everyday "Hi!" as a sure sign of pent-up passion.

Confidential to "Dis-satisfied": If he's the "play-boy" type, don't do anything to classify you as a "play-girl."

"Dear Kitti: I'm considered one of the brightest kids in my class, but I just don't seem to make the grade in popularity. I am well liked in my class, but I'm just not accepted into things. I don't understand. What do you advise? "Laney."

Dear "Laney": Use the brain, that enable you to make good marks, to figure how to get along in groups that do special things in which you want to be accepted. You'll begin to learn plenty about how to get along with people of all types if you join a group open to all, in which you are content at first to be a follower, not a leader.

"Dear Kitti: Do many girls encourage things that lead to pregnancy, to force a boy to marry? If so, why? Jim"

Dear Jim: Some do, and in reverse, some boys do likewise, to trap a girl who is in no haste to marry. Do what you know is right and neither you nor your girl will get into trouble.

"Dear Kitti: Why do so many people adopt a family instead of having their own children? Joe"

Dear Joe: Because they want children, after marriage, although as time goes on it appears for some reason they cannot conceive or bear their own, for reasons too personal for anyone to ask questions about.

Confidential to "Jilted"—Best way to try to regain his interest is to slide smoothly into dating others, without any great signs of yearning for The Vanishing Male's return.

"Dear Kitti Turmell: Please answer this as soon as possible. I would like to know where to get facts about figure control. I would also like to know how to have slim calves on your legs and stuff like that. "Vera"

Dear "Vera": Send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for my free leaflet, Diet And Exercise For The Teen-Ager.

Here are exercises to streamline the legs, recommended by Evelyn Lowendahl, an authority on physical education: Calf Streamliner: Balance

Chapter Thanked

Letters of thanks for donations were read at the recent meeting of Camosun Chapter IOOE from Mrs. S. Dumka, therapist for the mentally ill and Mrs. W. Clark, supervisor of the home for retarded children.

Burn of $100 was received by Mrs. Clark to purchase necessary equipment for the home while Mrs. Dumka received a gift of $25 from the Chapter for her therapy work with mental patients.

A letter was also received from Kolkish School thanking the chapter for the donation of books.

Mrs. V. Taylor was appointed convener of immigration and citizenship.

Boutiques Last Word

By CATHY LOWTHER

Boutiques: Know what they are? Flowers, or jewels, or French perfume? Not exactly.

Boutiques, pronounced bow-tee-ka, are the latest things in British boys' clothing stores.

To the tunes from the top 30, these shops sell the latest in short fashions from sweat-shirts to styled shirts and tennis shoes to Cuban heels, but specialize in the really weird, the more outlandish the better.

Setting the pace for these style shops are groups who wear different outfits for each performance, like the Rolling Stones, the current No. 1 group in Britain, Manfred Mann, the Animals and the Pretty Things.

One of the noted British tailors has said the British teen-ager is better dressed than any of his contemporaries. I wonder how he does it, after looking at some of these prices.

Hit singles here: I hardly have to tell you Mrs. Brown's Daughter leads the list by a mile. Second in sales is The Witch by the Sonics. Others are Stop! In the Name of Love, the Supremes; Count Me In, Gary Lewis and the Playboys; I'm Telling You

For Students

Second Chance Recommended

EDMONTON (CP)—Students with marks below university entrance levels should be admitted to college as an experiment, two professors say.

Dr. Francis J. Kelly and Dr. Steve Hunka, assistant professors of educational psychology at the University of Alberta, suggest this as a way of testing current practices on university admission.

"When a selection office chooses a 60-per-cent entrance requirement, that is simply a value judgment," says Dr. Hunka, at present doing research on entrance requirements for medical students.

Both say limited space now forces selection of only the most promising students.

"But with the complex automated society of the future, society may not consider it too great an expense to allow more students to obtain a university education. It may seem costly now, but perhaps it may be less costly than having them unemployed and on welfare."

Dr. Kelly, a former Southern Illinois University professor, says these arguments support his proposal.

The 60-per-cent requirement has been set without proof that it indicates a good chance the student will be successful in university; society may be wasting the talent of high school graduates who do not meet university entrance requirements; and a recent U.S. experiment showed that students below normal university admission standards did not have a much higher rate of failure in institutions of higher learning than those who did.

At Southern Illinois, he said, 100 freshmen were admitted even though they didn't meet requirements. Two years later 60 per cent were still in university.

Nothing So Lonesome, Morbid or Dreary . . .

MELBOURNE (Reuters)—Melbourne was a city without beer Saturday after a week-long strike by some 2,000 brewery workers.

And as the Australian song says:

There's nothing so lonesome, morbid or dreary,
As to stand in the bar of a pub with no beer.

Pan American Games To Winnipeg in '67

Manitoba

Winnipeg is at last secure in the knowledge that it will, after indecision and argument, host the 1967 Pan American Games. City council has finally voted approval of a financing formula which could provide the games with at least $500,000 more than the $3,000,000 projected deficit. But the vote was narrowly favorable—10 to 8.

In special session, council agreed to a formula which guarantees $2,730,000 from federal, provincial and municipal levels.

A testimonial dinner for veteran Canadian National Railway engineer J. L. Charles was tendered by senior officials of the line in Winnipeg on April 7. Mr. Charles is retiring.

For the past 31 years Mr. Charles has been associated with the building of railways that have pushed back Canada's northern frontiers. He began and ended his career planning new development lines, from the old Grand Trunk to the new Great Slave Lake.

The Tribune of Winnipeg marked 75 years of publication April 6 with an 80-page historical supplement and a front page in the typographical style of the year it was born.

Readers of the morning edition found page one topped with the old nameplate "The Winnipeg Daily Tribune." "Daily" no longer forms part of the name.

Average property taxes in Red Deer will increase by just over 5 per cent this year.

The new mill rate is 47, down from 50 last year. But there has been a major reassessment of city property which means a mill costs more to the taxpayer.

Alberta

Graders are working around the clock to keep the roads open in Rosedale, a coal mining hamlet 65 miles northwest of Calgary, where flood waters from Rosedale Creek have risen dangerously.

Flooding commenced two weeks ago when warm weather moved in down the creek and a cold snap froze it solidly at the creek's outlet at Red Deer River.

Seven families have had to evacuate their homes.

A farmer of the Custer area allowed cattle to starve to death and is now awaiting sentence following his plea of guilty to charges of cruelty and neglect.

The man, Morley Hoskins, was "boarding" cattle for another farmer, Harold Campbell, of Rosedale. Six cows, a bull and five calves were found dead on the Hoskins place and the remaining 30 head had had no food or water for days.

Mayor Grant MacEwan of Calgary was told Tuesday that although the city's transit system was gaining passengers there was no immediate assurance of a decrease in the system's deficit.

Alderman Roy Farran told a meeting of the city's transit committee that a rough estimate of the system's deficit would be about $350,000.

CURB BOWEL CRAMPING & GAS PAINS
Spasmodic (functional) irritation of the colon or large intestine may make you suffer from dull cramping, bloating, gas, constipation, diarrhea, hemorrhoids, flatulence, indigestion, nervousness, depression, and other symptoms. It is a common condition, but it can be cured. Get a special booklet, "How to Cure Curb Bowel Cramping & Gas Pains," free of charge. Write to: Curb Bowel Cramping & Gas Pains, P.O. # LBJ Likely to Match FDR

By JACK BELL.

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson appears well on his way toward writing in this session of Congress a legislative record as imposing as that compiled by Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1933.

It will require more than the 100 days Roosevelt needed then to alter the course of government, but the consensus in Congress is that by the time the lawmakers go home next summer what Johnson calls the "Great Society" will be firmly entrenched in American life.

In its first 100 days, the 89th Congress has given clear signs it intends to pass most of the major legislative proposals Johnson laid before it.

It took two giant steps in that direction last week when the House passed the health care bill for the elderly and the Senate completed legislative action on the $1,300,000,000 educational aid measure.

In addition to numerous minor actions Congress already had enacted a major bill to release gold reserves to support dollar stability, a measure to give federal aid to the 11-state Appalachia area and Inter-American development Bank authorizations.

Debate will begin in the Senate after an Easter holiday on legislation to guarantee Negro voting rights. The House this week will take up a Senate-passed measure to provide procedures for any presidential disability.

This all doesn't add up to the burst of legislation that rolled out of the 73rd Congress under Roosevelt's prodding. But Roosevelt was operating in a national atmosphere of near panic and Johnson in an era of unparalleled prosperity when Congress' tendency usually is to let well enough alone.

The social welfare legislation in Roosevelt's program changed the concept of federal government, a result that many in Congress believe will be attained again when Johnson's proposals are enacted.

Thieves Drop Loot

Two youths in black jackets broke into the B.C. Telephone Co. office, 1321 Blanshard, early Saturday—but dropped their loot and ran off when surprised by an employee.

Police said a maintenance worker coming on shift at about 5:30 a.m. encountered the youths as they came out of the building's north entrance.

One dropped a typewriter he was carrying, the other an adding machine, then both fled east on Johnson.

Police said they were unable to discover how the youths got into the building.

Visit to Rome King Fisherman Prize

By ALEC MERRIMAN
Outdoors Editor

The 11th edition of The Daily Colonist King Fisherman Contest opens May 1 and this year's big hidden weight prize will be an expense-paid trip for two to Rome, with a week's holiday in Italy.

Winners will be drawn from all entries after the Oct. 31 end of the contest and will travel to Rome on a luxury Canadian Pacific Airlines jet.

The popular weekend wilderness camping-fishing trip on Vancouver Island with a Vancouver Island Helicopters' whirlybird at the winner's disposal will again be a major hidden weight prize.

A 12-foot aluminum car-top boat purchased from Angus

Marine Thorne's boat headquarters will be a third contest-long hidden weight prize.

Last year's New Zealand trip hidden weight winner, 11-year-old Russell Murcheson and his father, Angus, will travel to New Zealand by Canadian Pacific Airlines next week and will be hosted by the New Zealand government for 12 days.

Miles and Frances Primrose will take their Vancouver Island Helicopters' trip within the next two or three weeks to the Nimpkish Valley-Sayward Lakes area with headquarters at Campbell River's Rustic Motel. John Ebert will be their fishing guide.

Colonist King Fisherman Contest officials will hit the road this week to distribute posters, weigh-in forms and rule sheets

Freighters Collide

Fire Follows Crash

MONTREAL — (UPI) — The crippled Dutch freighter Hermes limped into port Saturday night with 10 survivors from the West German freighter Transatlantic following a collision of the two ships early Saturday morning.

The 10 crewmen were from the 7,800-ton Transatlantic which was, at last report, still smouldering in Lake St. Peter in the St. Lawrence River, 60 miles downstream from Montreal. (See picture, Page 3.)

One man died in the mishap and another was missing. A third was taken to hospital in Sorel, Que., in critical condition.

'KEEP QUIET'

When the 5,700-ton Hermes docked, the survivors were spirited away by police and when crewmen attempted to say something to newsmen, they were told to keep their mouths shut by one of the ship's crew.

The captain, Walter Buschan, remained at Yamachiche, Que., near his burning ship.

which was being towed out of the main stream toward Sorel.

An eight-hour battle to save the Transatlantic ended when Capt. Buschan and a few remaining crewmen abandoned it.

Johnson Offer 'Not Enough'

Bomb Target

NAHA, Okinawa (AP) — Okinawa police said an unidentified American serviceman tossed an explosive device into an Okinawa bar frequented by U.S. Negro servicemen on Friday night. An Okinawa cook was burned slightly.

Esquimalt Seamen Arrested in Japan

TOKYO (Reuters) — Police arrested three seamen from the two Esquimalt-based Canadian destroyers currently on a goodwill visit to Japan and charged them with attacking a Japanese taxi driver in Yokohama Saturday.

Police identified them as Leon Joseph Kocivar, 22, and William Threshbrien, 26, both of the destroyer Saskatchewan, and Richard William Boonstra, 26, of the MacKenzie.

The three were alleged to have struck the taxi driver with an iron bar and attempted to run away without paying their taxi fare of 230 yen (about 70 cents), police said.

The taxi driver was admitted to hospital with head injuries.

Sultry Beauty Dies of Burns

CHICAGO (UPI) — Sultry actress Linda Darnell, one of Hollywood's reigning beauties of the 1940s and 1950s, died Saturday of burns received in a heroic attempt to rescue a friend's child in a blazing apartment.

The 43-year-old brunette died in the famed Sumner L. Koch burn unit of Cook County Hospital. Some of the nation's top burn experts had worked for 33 hours in hopes of saving her life.

HOLLYWOOD AT 15

But burns covered 30 per cent of the body of the Dallas-born actress who came to Hollywood when she was just 15 and went on to star in 50 movies, among them Forever Amber, in which she played the title role.

Little hope had been held out for her life since she was carried early Friday from the charred home of her longtime friend and sometime personal secretary, Mrs. Richard Curtis, in a fashionable section of suburban Glenview.

According to friends of the Curtis family, Miss Darnell died trying to save a teen-age girl who was already safe.

The actress dashed into the burning living room of the Curtis home in the apparent belief that Mrs. Curtis' daughter, Patricia, was there. Patricia had already jumped from a second storey window to the stone patio below. Miss Darnell was found behind a sofa.

IMPROVED TEMPORARILY

Although she had been listed in "very, very critical" condition, Miss Darnell appeared to show some improvement after she was brought to the Cook County burn unit. Her adopted daughter, Charlotte, 18, visited her and doctors said she was "slightly improved."

The fire broke out a short time after she and Mrs. Curtis sat up and watched the late movie, Star Dust, in which Miss Darnell starred in 1940.

Viet Nam: Quiet Diplomacy

Soviets Want To Help U.S.

By ARTHUR L. GAVNHON

LONDON (AP) — Soviet sources are quietly spreading the word in London that their country wants to help the United States end the war in Viet Nam.

Before and after President Johnson's offer for talks, Russian informants have been suggesting that neither Moscow nor Washington wants the Viet Nam war extended. They say both countries recognize that China, if rampant in Southeast Asia, could imperil world peace and that something needs to be done to check Peking's position in North Viet Nam.

To achieve these goals, Soviet sources imply, Moscow and Washington must find ways to co-operate. The Johnson peace plan seems to approach such a basis although the Russians seem to think it needs to be revised at least so the National Liberation Front (representing the Viet Cong guerrillas in the south) can be represented at any peace talks.

BIG DIFFICULTY

This is a big difficulty. The United States is unlikely to agree to dealing with the Viet Cong. But the Russians must — to back up their own oft-repeated pledge — get the South Vietnamese Communists into the picture, or risk condemnation by Communists around the world.

Still, there are important implications in the Soviet hints, which seem to point toward a Moscow yearning for some sort of tacit understanding between the super-powers to defuse the Southeast Asia situation — and perhaps even contain the Chinese.

MANY LEVELS

This sort of Russian thinking is being outlined in informal contacts on a variety of levels among diplomats, politicians and reporters.

It appears to fit into information reaching key Western governments through the official network of communication with Moscow. A highly placed Soviet diplomat discussing Viet Nam recently with British colleague remarked in Moscow:

"When fire breaks out firemen don't argue about their duties."

In London Russians have been seeking out British acquaintances to amplify their ideas. Nobody familiar with Soviet methods of communication believes all this to be accidental.

Viet Nam: Loud Reaction

Johnson Plan 'Propaganda'

MOSCOW (AP) — Pravda has dismissed President Johnson's offer of peace talks on Viet Nam without prior condition as part of a "noisy propaganda campaign" to continue American aggression there.

In the Kremlin's first official reaction to Johnson's speech in Baltimore, Md., on Wednesday, the Soviet Communist party organ insisted Saturday the President indicated no change of heart in U.S. policy and questioned his offer to negotiate.

Pravda commentator George Ratiand noted that "American propaganda seized especially on the expression 'unconditional' and accompanied it with the loudest commentary."

"However, official explanations of what in reality were restrictions on these conditions, were not long in coming."

He said the U.S. reply Thursday to a 17-nation appeal for a settlement of the Viet Nam battling insisted on a cessation of Viet Cong attacks as a condition for negotiations.

In his talks at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Johnson offered to join in "unconditional discussions" to halt the fighting and offered $1,000,000,000 for a vast Mekong River basin development program.

No MiGs Met

120 U.S. Warplanes Hit Bridges, Roads

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (AP) — More than 120 U.S. warplanes fanned out over Communist North Viet Nam Saturday, striking at a strategic bridge and highways. Officials said all got back safely after meeting little groundfire and no air challenges from Communist MiGs.

A Viet Cong-South Vietnamese firefight three miles from Da Nang gave 1,000 newly arrived U.S. Marines their first glimpse of the Viet Nam war but they did not become engaged. The ground troops came ashore concurrent with the arrival of the first four of 18 F4 Phantom jets flown by Marine pilots.

BRIDGE KNOCKED OUT

Seventy-five U.S. Navy planes from the carriers Ranger and Coral Sea knocked out the Kin Quang Bridge on North Viet Nam's Route 7, 120 miles south of Hanoi, U.S. officials in Saigon reported.

The Navy planes were over their targets for 30 minutes. In morning and afternoon runs, U.S. Air Force bombers and fighters ranged up and down Highway 7 and 8, about 100 miles north of the South Vietnamese border. A U.S. spokesman said they sprayed a variety of targets, presumably road convoys.

MARINES WATCH

The 1,000 newly arrived Marines stood by trucks and helicopters on Da Nang beach and watched a Vietnamese Ranger company fight in a village against the Viet Cong. There was no noticeable excitement among the Marines.

To Represent B.C. in Ontario

Hickman and Mar
Plowing Champs

DUNCAN—Tom Hickman of Chilliwack and Whaley Mar of Saanich will represent B.C. in the 1965 national plowing match in Ontario this October.

They were named winners on Saturday among the 27 entrants in the annual 10-event Cowichan plowing match viewed by several hundred spectators on the Riverside farm at Cowichan Bay.

B.C. TITLE

Mr. Hickman won the B.C. championship class and Esso trophy and Mr. Mar, second in the provincial event, won the Hamilton trophy as champion Island plowman.

John Watt, 72, of Duncan, not only was the oldest plowman in the biggest entry field in six years but he also won two trophies.

HORSE FLOWING

Mr. Watt took the Wright's Jewellers trophy for best horse plowing and the Cowichan match trophy for the most points of the day.

He was the oldest entrant after Cowichan Indian band member Danny Thomas, 78, left the field at noon.

BUSINESSMEN

K. Butcher won the businessmen's class and Waldon trophy. His eight rivals included district MLA Robert Strachan and Duncan Mayor Jack Dobson.

Other results: Three-furrow plowing: 1. David Allen of Saanich, Garner Brothers prize; 2. Tom Saville of Sidney; open tractor, Don McDowell of Saanich; mounted two-furrow plow, Clayton Hunter, 21, of Ontario, who also won the Stander trophy for tractor class aggregate and finished the best ground in match, finish in match and ins and out's.

BOYS AND GIRLS

Boys and girls under 18, two-furrow tractor plowing, 1. Doug Mar, 17, of Saanich, Saville trophy, 2. Doug Saville, 14, of Sidney; one-furrow tractor plowing, Zweitz De Witt, Cowichan, Holmes trophy.

Truck Loses
King-Size
Snack

PORT ALBERNI — What amounted to a full meal, with the emphasis on drink rather than food, was stolen early Friday when thieves lifted part of the load from a Canadian Pacific Merchandising Services truck.

Police said "a few" boxes of herring and 23 cases of beer were taken from the truck, parked beside the Island Coach Lines office.

Credit Union

Squire Turns
The Sod

PORT ALBERNI—MLA John Squire, a charter member of the Alberni District Credit Union, turned the sod Saturday morning for the organization's new building in downtown Port Alberni.

Turner Contracting (Alberni) Ltd. was awarded the contract last week with a low bid of $238,228 and will begin preparing the site Monday morning.

Other bids were $238,421 by Port Alberni Home Builders Ltd., only $192 above the winner, and $240,827 by Southern Construction Ltd.

FORMED IN 1941

Congratulations to the Credit Union, which was formed in April of 1941, were extended by Mr. Squire, Mayor Bishop of Alberni and Port Ald. Howard McLean.

President Harold Turner said a plaque commemorating the founders of the branch will be placed in the new building. The centre was designed by Credit Union national architect Eugene Sternberg. A. H. Barley of Barley and Weismiller, of Nanaimo, is associate architect.

4-H Winner

Proud winner of Victoria Kiwanis trophy as best senior 4-H speaker on Vancouver Island is Maureen Kinney, 15, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bliss Kinney of Duncan 4-H Jersey Club. She and junior winner Colleen Kelly, 13, of Brentwood and Howe Arts Club, were chosen Friday night in competition here and will go to B.C. finals in Kamloops April 22.

Two Areas Approve
Extra Hospital Cost

By JEAN BAIN

DUNCAN — Duncan city and North Cowichan municipal referendums to pay the two areas' shares of the extra Cowichan district hospital cost passed by huge majorities Saturday.

But a sewerage money bylaw for the Quamichan Heights subdivision in North Cowichan barely squeaked through.

98 PER CENT

Duncan voted 347 to 24 to put up the city's $70,140 slice of the $600,000 extra for the hospital, a 92 per cent majority. Only 20 per cent of the 1,500 eligible voters cast their ballots at city hall.

North Cowichan voted by almost as big a margin, 90 per cent, to provide its $192,960 share. The vote was 520 to 52 and about one-third of the 3,300 eligible voters turned out.

SEWERAGE BYLAW

The $57,000 Quamichan sewerage bylaw was approved 22-14, a majority of 61 per cent where 60 per cent was required. The turnout of 36 of the 70 voters amounted to 51 per cent.

The only centre with more than one polling place, North Cowichan, showed this breakdown in the hospital vote:

Municipal hall at Duncan, 685 yes, 43 no; Crofton, 24 yes, 34 no; Maple Bay 163 yes, two no; Sonoma 92 yes, one no; Westholme 18 yes, 12 no.

ALREADY DECIDED

The other two districts which must help pay the extra hospital bill, Kokish and Cowichan Lake, have already decided to do so by raising hospital mill rates.

A tender for the hospital must be accepted by April 26 or a second call for bids will have to be made, and this would likely mean an even greater cost increase.

Salvation Army

Of Service

PORT ALBERNI — The Salvation Army, which began with one man's concern for the underprivileged of England, marked its centenary with a ceremony at the city hall Saturday.

The Army flag was raised at Port Ald. Howard McLean, speaking for the mayors of the Twin Cities, proclaimed it Salvation Army Day in the Alberni.

Divisional commander Lt.-Col. L. Pindred said Gen. William Booth founded the Army because of his concern for the "submerged one-tenth of society" which made up the underprivileged of London.

11 COUNTRIES

Now, the Salvation Army operates in 71 countries and federations of countries.

The commander noted the Island settlement of Combs is named for T. B. Combs, the first Army commissioner in Canada.

He said some of his area's most faithful workers are from families located at Combs in a program started about 75 years ago to rehabilitate the needy of England.

RAISES FLAG

Capt. Peter Ross raised the flag, Alberni Valley Ministerial Society secretary Rev. D. C. Smith read from scripture and Rev. H. Mohr gave a prayer of thanksgiving.

Ald. McLean wished the Army "another 100 years and more of the same kind of success in service to humanity."

St. Joseph's, Comox

Low Hospital Bid
$500,000 Too High

COURTENAY—The lowest bid for the new St. Joseph's Hospital at Comox was more than $500,000 above the estimated cost, hospital board chairman William Moore announced Saturday.

It was the fourth time in recent months that tenders for projects in this area have been substantially above the amount available for construction.

THREE BIDS

Mr. Moore said the three bids were opened Friday in the Vancouver offices of the architects, Gardiner, Thornton and Thornton.

Estimated cost of the long-awaited hospital was $1,967,614. The tenders were Burns and Dutton Construction $2,466,000, Laing Construction, $2,652,900, and Dawson and Hall Construction, $2,667,728.

Mr. Moore said the hospital's board of directors decided to send the problem to the BCHS in Victoria and plans will come to a halt until the provincial officials reach a decision.

SCHOOL JOBS

The Courtenay district school board recently opened tenders for a new three-room school and a four-room addition and both were well above the money provided.

Earlier, above-estimate tenders caused cutbacks in plans for the Courtenay health centre. About $7,000 remains to be raised if the centre is to be completed according to the original plans.

field, and William McCullough, formerly of Nanaimo. Mr. McCullough's home is now in Vancouver.

Officials of an air-sea search said there is little hope any of the men aboard the 67-foot craft survived.

RAFT FOUND

An eight-man inflatable life raft was found floating in the water Thursday night by the U.S. Coast Guard. The coast guard checked with transport officials here and learned that this was not the life raft registered to Sea Ranger. This gave rise to reports that a second raft was aboard Sea Ranger.

Charles Martin, an official of a Vancouver shipyard, said today the raft registered to Sea Ranger—a six-man raft—was removed in Vancouver recently and replaced with the eight-man raft. He said the vessel had only one raft aboard when it left Vancouver for the halibut grounds.

PART OF GALLEY

The raft was found along with an eight-foot chunk of rowboat and part of a galley wall and pilot house.

The other missing men were identified as J. McClure Carter of Vancouver, the owner; Capt. Matt Bjorklund of North Saanich; Karl Ostergaard and August Seelja, all of Vancouver, Ragnar Soren of North Vancouver, and Kenneth McAlpin of Jordan Bay, N.S.

Four planes and four surface vessels were criss-crossing 3,000 square miles of ocean Saturday in search of the Sea Ranger.

Island Youth Told
To Heed Probation

NANAIMO—"If you want to finish up in Brannan Lake, break that probation," Magistrate Lionel Beavor-Potts told a 17-year-old Ladysmith youth in juvenile court Saturday.

The youth, who had two previous drunk convictions, pleaded guilty to public intoxication and was fined $25, given a one-year probation term and placed on a 9 p.m. curfew.

HELPED HOME

Police said the youth was being helped home by a friend when a plate glass door was smashed at a Commercial Street taxi office. Using a description supplied by the taxi dispatcher and the other youth, police apprehended the 17-year-old several blocks from the scene.

The youth told the magistrate he broke the door, didn't know the other youth and found the liquor in Ladysmith.

The magistrate replied, "Frankly, I don't believe you."

A 17-year-old Nanaimo youth convicted Feb. 18 of dangerous driving pleaded guilty to driving while under a two-year suspension. The suspension, a one-year probation and a 9 p.m. curfew were his sentence in February.

NO PERMISSION

Police said the youth drove a car down Commercial about 2:30 a.m. Saturday. He could only produce a learner's licence held by his brother and he had taken his father's car without permission.

Court added six months to the probation term, fined the youth $25 and ordered weekly reports to a probation officer for three months.

Post Office to Church

Huge Port Bell Gets New Home

PORT ALBERNI—The one-ton bell which hung in the Port Alberni post office tower from 1915 until the office was demolished in 1961 has a new home.

After four years in storage, the bell will call worshippers to the Church of the Nazarene in the 600 block Ninth Avenue South.

The gift was made by lawyer William Beckingham, representing the group which bought the post office property and demolished the building.

Rev. Bruce Fleming gave the bell a final polish as a truck brought its new, 40-foot steel tower from Port Machine Works where the tower was manufactured.

A metal cross was bolted to the top of the tower, and the minister and volunteers from his congregation then helped a McLellan Contracting Ltd. crew put the tower in place.

CLAPPER NEXT

Final step was to lift the bell to the tower and attach it to the frame. Joseph Ekland, who took a leading part in building the church, was lifted to the top of the tower and Lyle Hopwood rode the bell as it was raised. The clapper will be installed soon.

Duncan Event

Career Guidance
Draws Big Crowd

DUNCAN—The fourth annual Kiwanis-sponsored career guidance night Friday was the biggest yet, Duncan Kiwanis club official Sam Keeble said Friday.

A large number of senior students and parents from the Cowichan, Lake Cowichan, Ladysmith and Gulf Islands school districts attended the talks in Cowichan Senior High auditorium.

"There was tremendous interest from the students," said Mr. Keeble. "And the parents were enthusiastic, too."

A total of 100 counsellors from 47 different professions and trades spoke to students and parents in the event co-sponsored by the Duncan and Lake Cowichan Kiwanis clubs.

The Lake Cowichan club, led by Arnie Irwin, was in charge of the forestry program. Harold Whitefield of the local National Employment Service helped Mr. Keeble organize the career night.

Mr. Keeble said he had found some students had changed their minds about careers since the 1964 meeting and some "will probably change their minds again by next year . . . but at least they're thinking about their future."

Synthetic Adds Life

By BEA HAMILTON

FULFORD — A synthetic rain-based medium which has been on the market for only about a year is the key to what people say is "extraordinary life and color" in the paintings of Salt Spring Island artist H. B. Dickens.

People who flocked to the Fulford hall to see his recent exhibition of more than 90 paintings contributed $55, which will go toward the hall funds.

Mr. Dickens said about 30 of his works, the ones which proved the most popular, are done in a medium called cryla.

Elderly Cyclist
Injured in Fall

An 83-year-old man was in only fair condition Saturday in St. Joseph's hospital after hitting a curb and falling off his bicycle at the Fairfield shopping plaza.

Police said William Henry, 83, Howe, suffered a injured shoulder, cuts and shock.

"It is neither an oil nor a watercolor, though the paints will mix with water only," he said. "Once mixed, it does not dissolve and can be brushed on as in watercolor or plastered on as in oil paints."

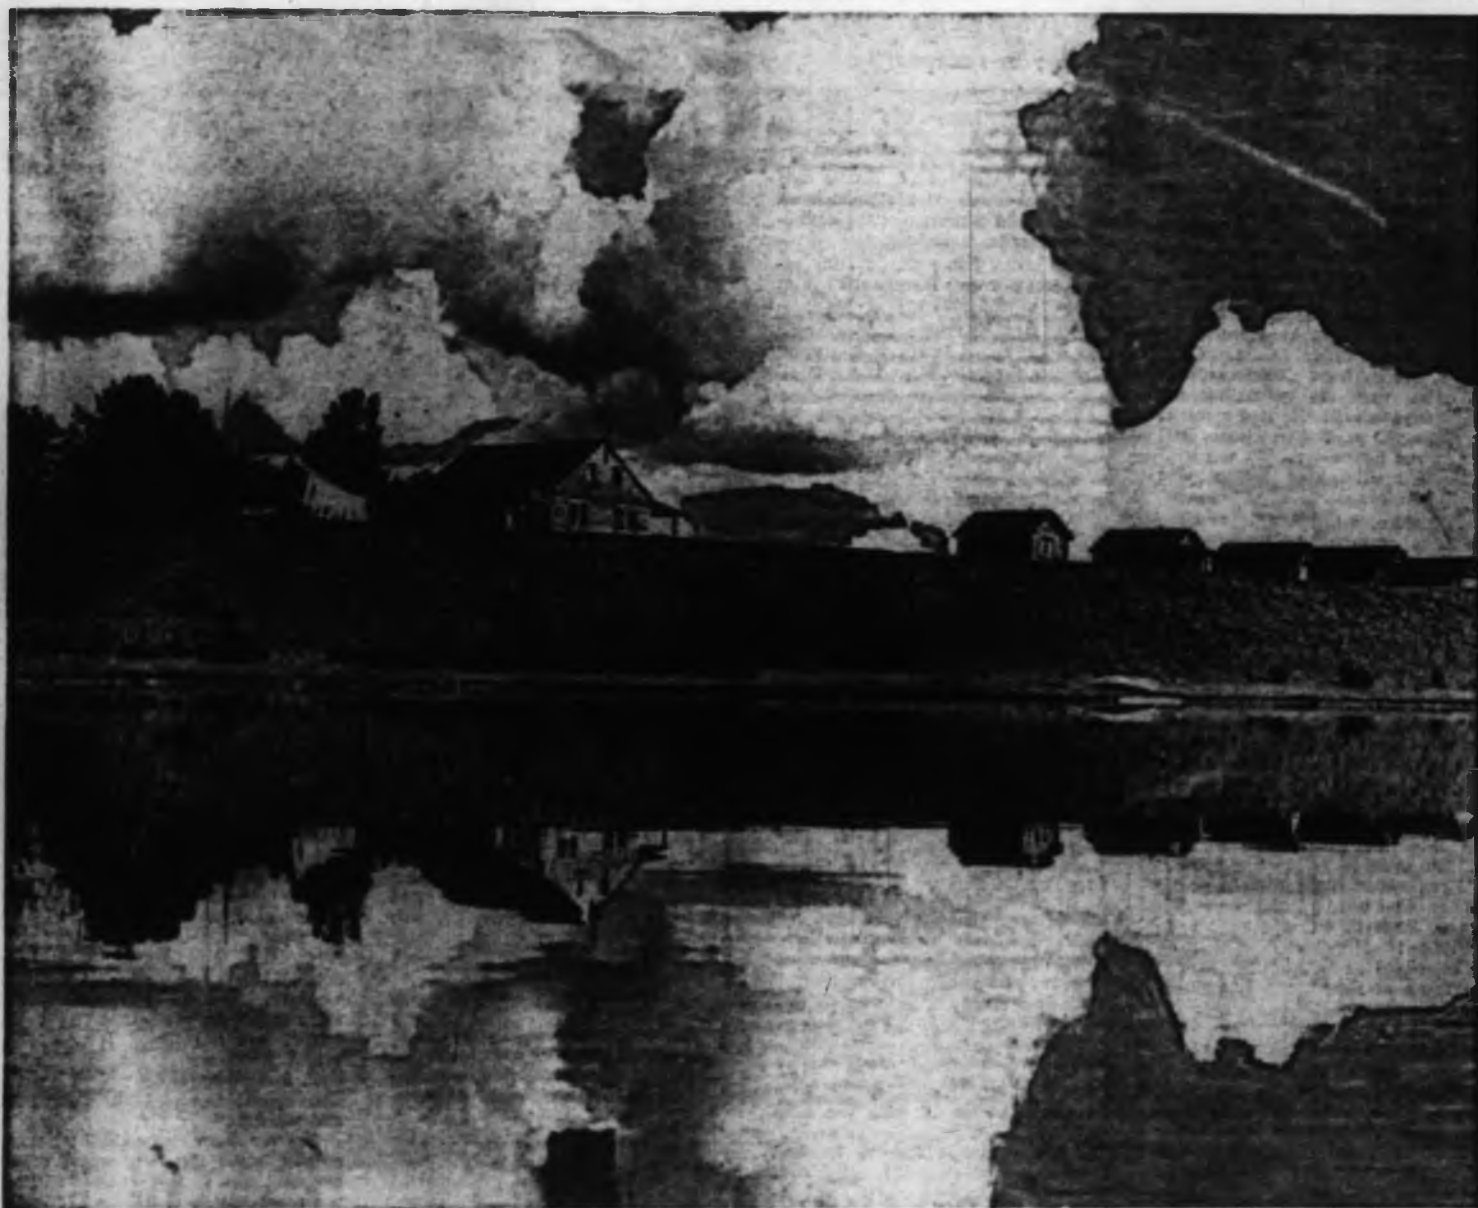

The favorite of many visitors was a large scene of a mountain near Cumberland, showing the rich dark red of the hills and the deep still green of the water below.

Exciting Start to Gay Nineties

By JAMES K. NESBITT

There was a wedding of such fashion that it was the talk of the town for weeks.

There was a ball for Royal Jubilee Hospital, and glowing color, grace and warmth ran rampant.

This was the Victoria in the spring of 1890—75 years ago. There are still a few among us who can remember.

I had a fine time going through The Colonist of all those years ago.

When I was a young marine reporter covering the Victoria waterfront often I met Capt. Joe Gosse. He was the federal government pilot for the Blue Funnel Line, and he brought the ships in from Race Rocks to the Outer Docks. Capt. Gosse came from Newfoundland, and, he used to yarn to me of his days in sail. He had a cousin here, too, Capt. Josiah Gosse, and he ran the lighthouse (now defunct) in Esquimalt. This Gosse was called Skipper Si.

Therefore, when I was reading the 1890 newspaper, my attention was arrested by this note: "A CLOSE SHAVE—As the steamer Islander was alongside her dock in Vancouver, Joe Gosse, one of the mariners, who was placing a canvas on to a lifeboat on the hurricane deck, missed his footing and fell a distance of 25 feet into the water between the steamer and the wharf. He had a very narrow escape, for if he had fallen half a foot further away, or closer to the boat, he would have undoubtedly been injured against the wharf or the ship. As it was he escaped without even receiving a scratch."

Now, about those certain young women who went picnicking to the Gorge. Victoria was shocked! Such goings-on! Here's the way The Colonist told it: "Victoria Arm was the scene of riotous merry-making. . . . several boat loads of young men and women, demi-monde, were picnicking among the gardens and along the shores, and during the day a girl known among her companions only as Effie, a resident of Broughton Street, became frantically jealous of another female of the party, to whom she believed her lover was paying greater attention than to herself. He finally left her side for a row with the second siren, and she stood watching the retreating boat from the landing."

And then what did Effie do? Screaming and yelling she plunged into the sea, announcing that she would drown herself. A policeman was not too far off and he rushed and plunged in after her, but she nearly drowned him too. However, all was well, and no lives were lost; but Effie that day really made a spectacle of herself.

A race off the waterfront was always big news. It's a wonder there were no shipwrecks, the way the rival vessels tore through the waters.

The Colonist told of one such race: "NECK AND NECK—There is always excitement in a race, and the better the mettle of the contestants, the more the excitement is intensified. When the racers are swift steamboats, rivals in business and in speed supremacy, the excitement reaches fever-heat.

"At about 4:30 p.m. . . . the report came from Beacon Hill that the two Sound steamers, the Olympia and City of Kingston, both due at 5 p.m., were having a brush in the Strait. Hacks were in immediate service, and many citizens enjoyed the pleasure of witnessing the race of giants from the heights along the shore, while many equally interested gathered on the docks to see the finish.

"At 20 minutes to 5, the familiar whistle of the Olympia was heard, blending with the shriller notes of the Kingston, which rounded Laurel Point and entered the harbor with her side-wheel rival close behind.

"Capt. Roberts, making a splendid landing, was the first with the plank and was discharging passengers before all was fast at her opponent's dock."

The new yacht was for a prominent citizen, whose wife was a granddaughter of Sir James Douglas. The vessel was named for his daughter Rita, who as Mrs. David C. Hughes, died here last Christmas.

The Colonist observed: "NEW PLEASURE YACHT—The pleasure yacht Rita, built in New York for Mr. G. A. McTavish, arrived over from Vancouver, having made the trip in 10 hours. She came out from the east on a CPR flat car.

"The Rita is a finely finished boat, being 'Carver' made, and is 32 feet long. She is supplied with a neat little naphtha engine, equal to a speed of seven knots, which can be increased to 12 with the help of her sails.

"The cabin is roomy, finished in cherry, and elegantly fitted with plush cushions, and every arrangement to make her a model of convenience and comfort. She is capable of carrying supplies for 600 miles and no doubt her owner will spend many pleasant hours on his trim little yacht."

The lady at the Driard, who fainted dead away, intrigued me, and I think you will enjoy reading about her exactly as it was mentioned in The Colonist 75 years ago: "An American gentleman named Crawie, who recently spent a few days at the Driard, has written to Mayor John Grant, requesting the city to pay for a dress worn by his wife, and which he claims was utterly ruined under somewhat peculiar circumstances.

"During a recent fire drill in front of the Driard his wife was sitting by the parlor fireplace when a stream of water struck the chimney, and a downpour of soot, water and dirt in general a moment later poured out of the fireplace and spread over the terrified lady, who fainted dead away, as a nervous person under the circumstances would very likely do.

"The dress Mr. Crawie estimates worth $110, and this sum the city is politely requested to hand over.

"Several of the aldermen expressed the opinion that the value of the costume was placed at a top figure.

"But," interpolated His Worship, "there is no law to prevent people wearing good clothes."

"The council finally decided that they would like to see the dress for themselves, and the clerk has been instructed to write to Mr. Crawie asking him to lay the garment before the board for inspection at their next meeting."

Well, I searched and searched, but I could find no further reference to Mrs. Crawie's dress.

The ball for the Jubilee Hospital was the social event of the season, you might say: "For six delicious hours some 200 couples participated in its delights . . . in the opening quadrille were Joshua Davies and Mrs. A. J. Smith, president of the Married Ladies' Club, J. Stuart Yates and Mrs. M. Young, Dr. J. C. Davis and Mrs. W. M. Chudley and Mr. and Mrs. William Dalby.

"Such a supper has seldom been equalled, and never surpassed in Victoria—the tables were a feast of beauty in themselves and they bore every tempting delicacy which might grace the banqueting board of an epicurean monarch.

"Of the costumes, what can be said: All were magnificent, and well set off the charms of the fair wearers. To attempt to describe them would be in vain. Every rich fabric, every brilliant hue, every bright jewel was represented, and each formed part of a splendid and harmonious picture of color, grace and warmth."

But for sheer rhapsody there was nothing quite like the report of a brilliant, high society wedding: "The marriage day is that of a lifetime; its happenings, surroundings, and circumstances are carried into after life with a vividness that never allows them to be forgotten.

"How much happier, then, are those recollections when they look back to a glorious day, fraught with pleasure and sunshine in life, and sunshine in the outer atmosphere and smiling friends and happy relatives who shower their congratulations as freely and joyously as the sun shines or the birds sing.

"Such a day was for Miss Flora Alexandrina (eldest daughter of Senator Macdonald) who was united in marriage to Mr. Gavin Hamilton Burns, local manager of the Bank of British North America.

Nature's Ways are Slow and Sure and Sometimes Violent . . .

by GUY BLANCHET

It is well known that, in the course of time, mountains are created by surface or internal pressures affecting the earth's crust and that Nature is continually tearing them down—by the action of frost and water in slow attrition and by avalanches and massive rock slides the faster and more violent assaults.

These usually occur in remote places and interest only the scientist; but occasionally when the destruction of man and his works is involved they become news of world-wide interest. Recent disastrous slides and floods have brought attention to this hazard on roads and railways and settlements in mountainous countries. Long lines of transportation cannot avoid high places and sharp valleys. The most careful observation and skill of engineers cannot guarantee security.

Railways with their limitations as to grade and curve can find some protection in tunnels and snow sheds; highways have more latitude in avoiding dangerous places but are more exposed to minor accidents of rolling rocks and avalanches.

Precipitation in the form of rain, usually has a natural run-off by the river of the valley but on the peaks it accumulates as snow and ice. Normally, in melting it is carried by small streams into the valley but occasionally abnormal conditions produce great masses which suddenly released on a steep mountain slope, gather momentum . . . widen . . . tear up trees and surface rocks and pile the debris in the valley.

There are certain conditions which reveal slide danger—the nature of the material on the lower slopes and in the valley; obvious channels down the mountainside; forest cover, the light green of buck brush, marking a stream between the dark of conifers.

Both railroads and highways are patrolled, by trained men observing slide dangers and debris, rolling rocks which might cause disaster. In places, conditions of snow and ice accumulation are checked as to flood and drought probabilities. In the case of a settlement in steep mountain country, usually at a mine or in timber development, no protection can be given beyond the most careful study of the situation before location . . . and conditions change with time.

The nature of the rock plays an important part. Hard, igneous rocks weather slowly but may have steep declivities. A slide there is like that of snow off a roof, carrying with it only loose surface material. It is different with sedimentary rocks which disintegrate more rapidly and produce a loose, fragmentary surface. Depending on the pitch of the formation and the surface slope, slides tend to produce a "condition of rest" in which some unusual disturbance overcomes that of gravity which has already been satisfied—usually in small slides. In such conditions the mountain may be reduced to a small mass at the peak with skirts of rubble extending from peak to lowlands in all directions. In such a condition there would be little danger of a serious slide but for a road, maintenance would be a continuing task, clearing loose material dribbling on to the roadway. This condition was encountered in construction of the Canol pipeline through the Mackenzie Mountains. It was simpler to bulldoze a road through the rubble of the mountainside than build one on the permafrost of the valley. Fortunately, after the pipeline was completed, like other war projects, it was abandoned.

The slide on the Chilcotin on the Hope-Princeton highway was an avalanche scraping the mountainside and plunging into a sharp valley. Its momentum carried it some distance up the slope across the valley where its unstable front slid back on either side of the main stream . . . the back lash. Two miles of highway were wiped out and there were casualties in cars caught by the slide. Regardless of the disaster, the road will be rebuilt, people soon forget and it may be 50 years before such a slide is repeated.

Not far north of the Hope-Princeton highway is the valley of the Coquihalla, a place of steep mountainsides and a sharp valley. Cattle had been driven through this in the early days along a primitive trail. The CPR had built a railroad high on the northern mountainside which was so often closed for months by slides that it finally was abandoned. When the transmountain pipeline was under consideration, the Fraser Canyon was fully occupied by two railroads and a highway so it was decided to use the Coquihalla and to bury the pipe in the valley where slides might cover it but could not move it. The view of the valley from the air was grim. An experienced pipeliner looking down said, "I wouldn't know how to bid for that if it was 'cost-plus.' No commercial highway could be built there. The railway had to be abandoned but the pipe was laid and oil still flows.

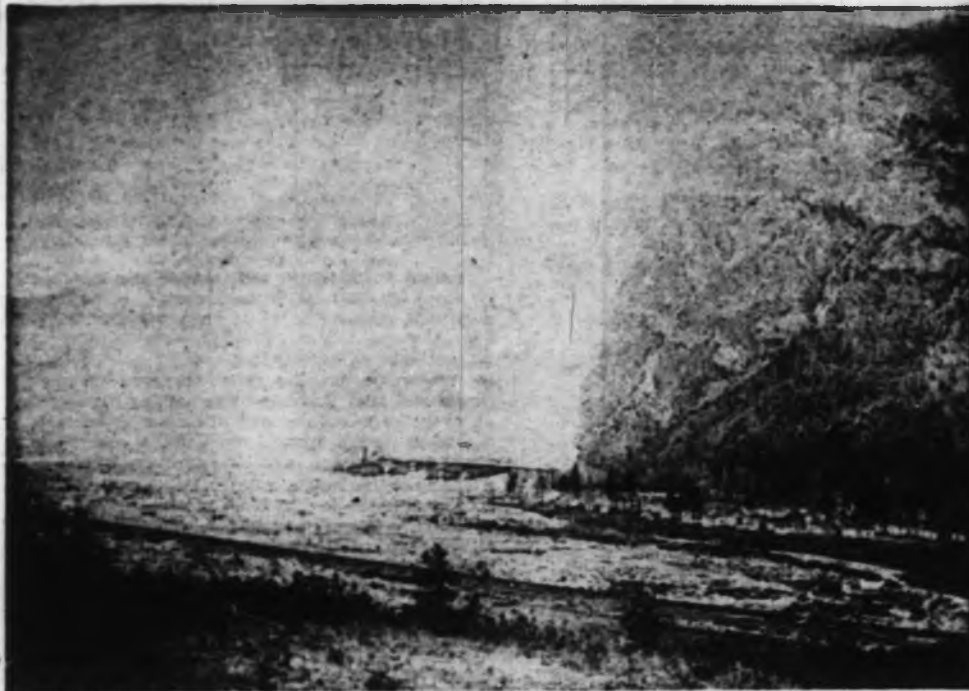

A practice of the pipeliners is to hold to the heights above the avalanches if possible or to the bottom of the valley. Avoid sidehills. If it's necessary to make a descent follow directly down the slope. It might be thought that gravity assisting the pumping station would be an advantage. It is not if the drop is serious. The extra pressure makes it necessary to use heavy, expensive pipe and construction and maintenance are difficult.

MOUNTAIN MENACE

The slide hazard was encountered by Trans-Mountain at a number of points where there was little choice. A few miles west of Hope, the railway is just above the Fraser and the highway just above that. Cheam mountain rises steeply above. Slides had occurred there. With difficulty, permission was granted to bury the pipe in the mountain side of the highway. It has been unharmed by later slides which buried the highway and railway. At two places where the pipe was laid above the railway of necessity, mud slides occurred which swept over the pipe but damaged the railway, in one case derailing a freight train carrying wheat. The only way to get rid of the wheat was to burn it.

In narrow valley, the railway had naturally chosen the best location near the river on the most favorable side. North of Blue River one of the worst situations was encountered. The railway on the west side was pestered by frequent mud slides and there was no room above it. The pipeline had to follow the other side of the river where conditions were fair till it encountered a sand slide which started high on the mountain and had reached the "position of rest," almost. The trail was a narrow notch cut into it, high above the river into which a dribble of sand gathered in such a way that a vehicle was tilted over the steep drop to the river. This condition existed for two miles, bad for driving and insecure for the pipe. This was overcome by crossing the sand slide high on the mountain where it was comparatively narrow with good ground on either side. A highway here would have little choice. It would have to follow the old tote road, widen it and perhaps use snowsheds to carry the sand over it, or use the railway right-of-way.

Long-Hidden Letters Finally Bring to Light

For half a century, a tissue-wrapped package of letters rested hidden, romantically, behind a beam in the attic of an old Victoria house.

The passing years stained and cracked the envelopes themselves, but the contents remained whole and legible, although brittle, and have brought to light a small corner of history belonging not only to Victoria, but to the colorful days of the Yukon gold rush.

The letters were written by a young man of the city to a young lady here. She is no longer living, but the writer still is.

He is Harold P. Wilson of Harbinger Street, a grandson of Thomas Harris, Victoria's first mayor, and now in his 80s.

Surprised and intrigued to be shown correspondence he'd written so long ago, Mr. Wilson gave his permission for publication. So did the family of the young lady, although they requested that they not be named.

Consequently, you'll read here what young Harold wrote to "Amy" so long ago. Harold Wilson was employed by a bank and his first letter, written Feb. 21, 1899, tells Amy a secret:

HOTEL VANCOUVER

DEAR AMY:

I have just this minute arrived in Vancouver and as I had my breakfast on the boat I have a little time before going round to the bank.

I saw Robert (Amy's brother) last night just before I went and when he told me you came out just after I went, I more than kicked myself because I wanted to see you alone awfully (sic) badly.

I'm going to tell you something now Amy what I intended to tell you last night but didn't get the chance and you must not let a soul know, not even the girls. I'm not going to stay at Vancouver at all, I'm going up to Lake Bennett where a branch of the bank is being opened and it must be kept secret until it's started so don't tell anybody.

I hope you won't be angry with me for deceiving you like I did but I really intended to let you know before I went.

I'm writing to you just as soon as possible as I won't get the chance again until we're over the White Pass which will mean a week anyway. Time is getting short now and so I think I'll have to close this letter. I'm wearing your badge all the time.

Yours affectionately,

HAROLD.

PS.—Don't tell a soul that I'm going any further than Vancouver.

PSS.—Send me that lock of hair in your next letter please.—H.

Feb. 25, 1899.

DEAR AMY:

We arrived in Skagway this morning and start for the White Pass tomorrow morning, the train taking us part of the distance.

The trip up wasn't very interesting, although it was calm all the way except in Queen Charlotte's Sound which we entered the morning after leaving Vancouver. I got up but lay down again in about 10 minutes. I would have been pretty ill if I hadn't but felt alright again as soon as we reached calm water.

HUGH P. WILSON, left, outside the Merchants' Bank of Halifax, at Bennett, Yukon Territory, April 26, 1899. With him, centre, is an unidentified bank customer, and right, the manager "Mr. F."—B.C. Archives

Yesterday morning snow appeared on the shores and after that there was nothing but snow all over the mountains and along the shore and when we got to the Lynn Canal a cold wind struck us which has been blowing ever since.

Skagway is rather a queer looking place but I can't describe it very well, not having had an opportunity to walk around yet. There are a lot of these patent tar paper houses which maybe you have seen in the windows in Victoria.

Both Mr. F. and I carry loaded pistols all the time although I don't suppose we'll ever need them.

You'd better not trouble to answer this letter as we start tomorrow for L. Bennett, and I'll write to you again from there.

I think it's pretty cold going over the pass as a man is in the room now with a frost-bitten nose, a deuce of a looking object; and Mr. G., my brother's partner in Victoria, left here last night on the Tees with both feet frozen.

When you write, send a long letter, telling me how everything is, yourself especially, and don't forget to send that little curl hanging down on the left side, the one I told you about last Sunday. Nobody will ever miss it and I want it badly, and really I've deserved it for I've worn your badge all the way up and this morning Mr. F. asked who gave it to me.

I suppose you received my last letter from Vancouver alright and hope that Robert will give you this one as soon as it reaches him. I'll have to close this poor epistle now and write one to Robert, although I'm not going to write home before I get to Bennett.

Yours affectionately,

H.

SHAGWAY at turn of the century "Rather a queer-looking place."

LAKE BENNETT,
Feb. 28, 1909.

DEAR AMY:

It's only a few days since I wrote to you last. As I can give you an address now and want to hear from you I'm writing again and will try to give you an idea of the country we passed through on the way here.

On Sunday morning we got up at 5 o'clock to catch the train for the summit of the White Pass, which was supposed to start at 7 but never left till 9. There was lovely scenery on the way, the track winding along the side of a mountain, the valley through which the trail goes being right below us and huge mountains rising up on the other side, everything of course covered with snow.

To get a good view I had to scrape the ice off the inside of the window every now and then.

The track is only 10 miles long but it took us seven hours to reach the summit, the track sometimes being covered with snow at the corners and the engine having to make three or four attempts before it could pull us round them.

When we did arrive at the summit at 4 p.m.

If Const. Strickland of the NWP (Royal North-west Mounted Police) had not been with us we wouldn't have been able to get anything to eat. However we got a meal alright — no cakes or candies like you and I won at Mrs. Fell's — and then started to drive in a sleigh for Lang Cabin, eight miles further on.

The trail is only a track, wide enough for sleigh, beaten in the snow and it was swifly (sic) cold driving, a cold wind that almost always blows here being in our faces. My nose started to freeze but Mr. F., the manager of our bank here, saw it in time and after rubbing it for a little while it came around alright, only swelling a little.

You wouldn't recognize your dearest friend up here. I don't think you'd even know me. Everyone muffs up so and all the men with moustaches and beards look old because their breath freezes on them and little icicles hang down. I saw an icicle a couple of inches long hanging from a horse's mouth.

It looked queer going along the trail to see a light issuing from a tunnel in the snow but it's really the door of a house buried completely in the snow, the smoke stack and door being the only signs of a dwelling.

It took us 3½ hours to drive from the Summit to Log Cabin where we put up for the night. Next morning we started again for our destination, another drive of eight miles being before us and in the last mile a spot on my right cheek froze before I knew it but after rubbing it for a little while it thawed out but was rather sore.

We arrived at Bennett, which is to be my home, about noon, and it's nothing but a few huts and tents on the edge of the lake.

We're stopping at the Lake View Hotel just at present, and stay indoors, you may be sure, the temperature being zero outside at present.

I hope for your sake Amy you'll never get into a country like this, it's no fun.

Write just as soon as you can, Amy, and don't forget that lock of hair.

Yours affectionately,

HAROLD.

P.S.—It doesn't matter about keeping my whereabouts secret any longer now as we've started. H.

MOUNTAIN MENACE

Approaching the Yellowhead Pass from the west, the railway is located high above the Fraser on the southern mountainside. To the north, a good location from Tete Jaune Cache pinches out with a steep mountain slope reaching to the canyon of the Fraser. We had found what appeared to be a good location for the pipe on a bench above the railway when, boom! . . . From a narrow draw which the railway crossed with a trestle came a flood which caused the trestle to collapse just as a passenger train reached it. The engine was carried down the slope, fortunately breaking free of the coaches. The bench location was off.

Yellowhead Pass is one of the lowest in the Canadian Rockies but just to the north is Mount Robson, its highest peak, with other tall mountains to the south. Another case of sharp contrast is in the lower Mackenzie. To the east is the pre-Cambrian plateau, one of the oldest land masses in the world, at one time a region of mountains, then covered with thousands of feet of ice, now reduced to a comparatively low plateau with innumerable lakes but few important elevations or valleys. But to the west of the great Mackenzie valley the Mackenzie mountains represent a geologically recent plateau, lifted to 5,000 feet and now reduced by erosion to scattered mountains cut by many irregular valleys. The sedimentary formation is rapidly crumbling away, as is evidenced by slides, new and old.

Rarely, even in geologic times have great masses of the upper mountains broken away in giant slides. The most famous one was the Frank slide of 1903 in the Crow's Nest Pass. Its upper limestone formation, standing almost vertically to the flatter coal measures below, broke away (possibly due to disturbance caused by the mining of the coal) and slid into the valley of Old Man River in a three-mile stream carrying millions of tons of rock, filling the valleys and burying 80 people. The north shoulder held and saved the town but it was cut by many deep fissures. Like most major slides the first one leaves an insecure situation and is followed by minor ones. These were rumbling down when I was there a year later but were of little consequence and people forgot the threat of the north shoulder but official observation finally considered the threat of the collapse of the north shoulder too great and arranged for the evacuation of the town.

The north shoulder still holds. Old Man River found a new course. The railway was rebuilt and a highway across the slide permits tourists to see the great scar on the mountain and the masses of debris covering the beautiful valley of the Old Man River, burying its people, their flocks and herds, probably unconscious of disaster till it overtook them in sleep at four o'clock in the morning. . . . People soon forget but Nature has a long memory.

Slides in miniature may be observed on any great river, creating curves and building up islands. On Slave River at Big Bend, the river was cutting into the light, sandy soil of the east bank and building up the other side with sediment, in a six-mile curve, almost a circle. The neck of the curve was only a quarter of a mile. Tomorrow? This will be cut and the new land, now a point, will be an island.

Erosion is different, where a big river like the Mackenzie is undercutting alluvial land. We had an experience of this on our survey of the river. We set a picket on a point of an alluvial bench one night. In the morning as we approached we saw our picket and an acre of bench land slowly sink until even tall trees disappeared. Fortunately this was before we had landed.

In a mountainous country there are two worlds: that of the peaks, always crumbling, the source of rivers, with their snow and glaciers; and that of the valleys, their soil enriched and irrigated by mountain streams. There is the situation of yesterday, of today and tomorrow, and these are usually changing slowly.

But sometimes the change takes the form of a flood, an avalanche or a rock slide which bring disaster and tragedy to dwellers of the valley and to those who travel the broad highways.

The mountain is not safe and solid, nor is the valley always calm and secure.

"Will you be going, next, to Central Asia? I am interested in obtaining a particular type of yogurt" . . .

"Can gold still be found in the Amazon? And if so, where?" . . .

"We are planning to go all around South America with our children, as you did. Please advise us on clothes, climate, food, health and prices. And is there evidence of any link with ancient Egyptian civilization?" . . .

Ever since our return from our travels to Cape Horn and back, with our two babies along, we have been amazed at the number and variety of questions directed to us, largely as a result of The Islander series of articles on our adventures and of our subsequent lectures. Also, by the way, The Islander gets about, judging by the many people who have gone to much trouble to visit us or write from afar. Letters included one from a Frenchman, in French, requesting with Gaelic fervour that we immediately reply, to reach him as he passed through Los Angeles, advising him how to get from there to Panama.

We told him there were planes and buses and to consult a travel agency. . . And later received a delightful Christmas card from Paris, conveying his warmest thanks for having enabled him to complete his trip!

Many enquiries are very sensible; some cause considerable head-scratching and there are a few from crackpots. We are glad to answer as best we can, while trying to make it clear that we are just ordinary Canadians who can only talk from our own observations and experiences. But we are still waiting for the day when someone sends postage to cover our reply—it is amazing how the cost mounts up!—except for the one who enclosed an intriguing 49 cents "to encourage this correspondence!"

To attempt to cover even a fraction of the queries in this article would be ridiculous. But there is one aspect that both impresses and concerns us: The number of people, including Victorians, who announce their intention to drive through South America from B.C., even to Cape Horn and back, and want the "gen." In one case we were actually just in time to dissuade the would-be adventurers from investing in the rugged vehicle and other expensive equipment they judged they needed for the journey.

We admire such courageous spirits and who are we to say, "Don't be foolhardy!" But our definite advice is: "You can't make it and don't try!"

For one thing, despite certain articles, books and advertising that seem to us and obviously to others, to imply the opposite, the Horn cannot be reached on wheels, unless your auto is able to sail the stormiest waters of this world, make landings that would baffle an Antarctic seal and climb rocks where a goat could scarcely venture. Contrary to surprisingly widespread ideas—which we, in our innocence, shared before we left Canada—it is not part of or even adjacent to any part of the South American mainland where any possibility of road travel even remotely exists. It is the southern 1,300-foot peak of tiny surf-bound Horn Island, nearly 300 miles south of the Straits of Magellan, beyond desolate and mountainous Tierra del Fuego, which is itself a huge island; beyond Navarino Island, and thence beyond a whole chain of further rugged and bitterly cold, barren islands, far out in the wild sub-Antarctic seas.

Nothing lives there. No ships call there. We "rounded" it, by a one-in-a-thousand chance, in a tiny Chilean naval vessel, in a howling gale, saw it at close hand—and can only say that anyone who claims to have driven to or from it has supernatural powers or the quaint excuse that an ad man made to us: "Why not? It is darn good advertising!"

Even leaving out the Horn: despite often indescribably bad roads, distances, extremes of altitude and climate, a very determined, tough and lucky driver, with tons of cash to spend,

An Attempt to Drive a Car
To Deep South America
Is NOT Advisable

BUS or BURRO SAFER TRAVEL

might make it to Ushuaia on Tierra del Fuego via Argentina, provided he had his vehicle shipped across the Straits of Magellan from the mainland and transported by sea or airlifted around the Darien Gap—approximately 500 miles of dense jungle below Panama where no road as yet exists. It has been done. But, on the west coast of South America there is no land communication whatever through the jumble of mighty mountains that constitute the last 1,000 miles south beyond Puerto Montt in Chile.

As for the rest of the continent, apart from the far, wild south: don't be fooled by all the nice, red lines, indicating first-class highways, which appear on many maps. They are, too often, merely symbols of prestige and optimism, at any rate as far as long stretches and possible maintenance are concerned, with sections near frontiers more like tank-traps. Service stations outside urban areas are rare or primitive, with replacement of mechanical parts a nightmare. The ingenuity of the usually eager-to-help mechanics and passing peons in improvising repairs at minimum cost would put their North American counterparts to shame. But usually, if you're stuck, outside the big cities, you're stuck good and proper.

Added to these problems and many that we have not the space to mention, are the fantastic obstructions of red tape frontier and customs regulations. These are particularly severe on Canadians because Canada does not belong to the Organization of American States. A heavy bond or money deposit is required, for each country traversed, usually of at least four times the North American value of the automobile as estimated by the officials concerned and sometimes a lot more. Also, Brazil, by our last advice, still prohibits the import of tourist autos under any circumstances. And, generally speaking, you may not sell your car or leave the country without it, however dire your need to do so, unless you pay the fantastic duties demanded when a car is brought in "for sale".

Besides such trifles, you'll probably find yourself in jail, whether guilty or not, in the event of an accident involving another vehicle, with getting out a peculiar and costly business. And there is the considerable risk of theft and sometimes malicious damage in those countries where a car is beyond the dreams of the hungry majority, where foreign license plates automatically signify the unbelievably rich "gringo" and the proceeds from a windshield-wiper may buy a poor family for a couple of weeks.

South America is a fascinating medley of nations with a question-mark future. Its peoples are among the most colorful, generous and hospitable of this earth. A journey through and around it by conventional means in the tourist agency and guided tour pattern can be the delightful, safe and comfortable experience of a lifetime.

But no one will ever reach the Horn on wheels and the time to travel the 10 republics of our vast twin continent by car from Canada has not come, yet. Meanwhile, what better way for gypsy travellers to get to know our Latin neighbors in depth, than bus, train, burro, riverboat, the occasional luxury of the excellent airlines for the drearier distances, and a pair of stout shoes?

Our feet are itching already. Hasta luego! Someday we'll be seeing you in Punta Arenas!

Dr. Roe and His Wife Live With Two Feline Friends . . .

By VIVIANNE CHADWICK

They bought it when they were newlyweds, some 20 years or more ago, a little cottage part way up the hill on Killarney Road, above the bright waters of Cadboro Bay. And, though Frank Gilbert Roe, LL.D., FRSC, and his wife Doris are well acquainted with other parts of the world lived in and visited during the busy and creative years they both knew, even before they ever met, they never want to live anywhere else.

They are English born. Dr. Roe came out to Canada before the turn of the century, as a boy in his teens. His father homesteaded in Alberta, and he himself has been rancher, farmer, and locomotive engineer, although it is, of course, his literary work to which he owes his fame as a scholar and an historian. Of all his published articles and books, the two most outstanding are "The North American Buffalo" and "The Indian and the Horse," which latter constitutes Volume 41 in the official "Civilization of the American Indian" series.

Doris Roe's life, up until the time she met her husband in 1941, had followed a different course. As a very young woman during the First World War, she was in England's Land Army, and when that was over she found herself, like many another, at a loose end. Peacetime seemed flat and pointless. But then a long-cherished ambition began to nudge gently at her consciousness once more. Once, as a child, she had been taken to something called "The White City Exhibition," and there she had seen a number of scenic photographs which had quite enthralled her. They were all of Canada, and very specially of British Columbia: the orchards of the Okanagan, with their fabulous apples, cherries and peaches . . . the lakes, mountains, rivers, and mighty forests of the province . . . and many lovely views of Vancouver Island, with its wildflowers and its gardens. All these she had longed to see, and now that her own country no longer needed her to help win its war, the desire to see this never land returned more strongly than ever. She would go 'round the world—via Canada!

"I had almost no money," she recalled. "I knew I would have to work my way."

AS A MATTER OF FACT she started off with a debt of some £11. So when she had crossed the Atlantic and arrived in New York she realized Canada would have to wait for awhile. She found herself a job with a family who needed someone to drive a car and to cook! She evidently filled the bill satisfactorily, and she held the position for a year and a half, hoarding her funds, because the next stop was to be Vancouver Island.

And the Island didn't disappoint her. It was all she had hoped. Now she could have an outdoor job, which was much more in her line, and she went to work at Westholme, on a sweetpeas farm. She was lucky, moreover, in having a friend living in Alberni, so she stayed there sometimes, and saw more of the country.

But the world tour beckoned, and the next step took her to New Zealand. Here some new experiences awaited her. The job she landed was for an organization which operated hostels, but this one, she says, was an extremely poor one. The meals were poor, and the pay (and the weather, although she didn't really blame the hostel for that). There were other difficulties. There was a supervisor, of whom she very soon began to have the strongest suspicions, involving the cash box. Somehow or other the money taken in during the day never seemed to bear the proper relation to the amount which was put away at night! The books never balanced, either. And presently the supervisor began to realize that the girl wasn't stupid . . . she was catching on! This situation was handled by the simple expedient of cooking up a good excuse to get the newcomer fired. So that was the end of that job.

THE NEXT ONE too had its peculiarities. About this time Doris' elder sister came out from the Old Country and joined her. The two went on to Australia, and here they went through an anxious time for awhile, because it seemed that jobs were very hard to find. They had both been easy enough to salt away their fares home, but they were down, interpellated Dr. Roe at this point in the story, to "tea and crackers" before they landed anything.

What they acquired were jobs in a seasonal hotel as waitresses, though this was something neither had attempted before. However, they assured the party who interviewed them they were quite capable of whatever might be necessary . . . although the whole project hung in the balance when they were asked, "What about your uniforms? You have these, of course?"

Hastily they both said, oh yes, of course . . . and the moment they were free dashed out to the nearest restaurant to see what kind of uniforms were de rigueur in Australia! Luckily Doris' sister was an excellent dressmaker, because the two girls purchased the necessary materials forthwith, and then sat up the entire night making, by hand, two uniforms, two caps, and two aprons. As they had bought one apron to serve as a sample from which to copy, they now had three of these, and a certain amount of juggling became necessary in the matter of laundering, so that there was always one clean apron ready!

THE HOTEL turned out to be a very odd place, with odd guests and an equally odd management. Bus boys and waiters were a rough lot, and the cook was inclined to lose her head when faced with any kind of crisis such as frequently happens in kitchens. Because of this, the Christmas dinner (the girls had been hired for the Christmas and New Year holidays) was an utter disaster, and almost everything on a long and elaborate menu had to be crossed off. And she remembers that the flies in that kitchen were "simply appalling." However, the tips were good, and outside of a plateful of potatoes tossed into a guest's lap one evening, the new hands apparently got by safely.

After this came a brief period of work on a wheat station, and when that was ended Doris went on alone to Ceylon, from there to visit friends in India, and so home again.

Her next move was to enroll for a course in social training at Bedford College, but when this was finished she found that Vancouver Island was still calling to her. Back she came to stay with her friend in Alberni, and while there she began to write, mainly outdoor articles for various publications. It was through her writing, and her fondness for the water and for swimming, that she met Dr. Roe.

THEY HAD GONE to Vancouver, she from the Island and he from Edmonton, to an authors' convention. She was shy, she says, and promptly became known as "the girl who always sat in the corner." But she conquered her shyness when she saw a notice on the bulletin board to the effect that Dr. Roe would take a party swimming at the beach, and determined to go along, even though she thought that they would probably be all men, and wouldn't want her tagging along. However, what happened was that she was the only one who turned up—so she and her new friend went for their swim themselves. And that was that.

She is a gifted painter. The walls of the cottage at Cadboro Bay are covered with charming, expertly done watercolors, while her oils, mainly Coral pieces, some border-

Although it is a week until Easter, most of us like to plan a little ahead for Easter Sunday dinner. This year let's break with tradition and forsake the ham or roast lamb usually considered traditional Easter fare. How about something quite different? How about Beef Wellington? . . . a dish worthy of the day.

In its original form Beef Wellington was an awesome and expensive undertaking. Named for an English Duke, but created by a French chef, it involved a beef tenderloin covered with pate de foie gras and wrapped in puff paste . . . often a Waterloo for many a cook-hostess. However, this dish has been modified and can now be prepared quite easily by any housewife. Created with a family steak, cut from plentiful beef and prepared with the magic of instant meat tenderizer, it is a masterpiece for festive feasting at your Easter table. Of course you can still use a beef tenderloin if your pocket-book warrants it, but our directions will be for the more economical family steak treated with instant meat tenderizer.

CHEF'S VICTORY

crust mix or the equivalent quantity of pie crust dough from your own recipe.

For the liver pate (make ahead and chill), 1 lb. liver (I used chicken livers), 2 small onions sliced, 4 Tbsp. chicken fat or butter, 1 four-ounce can mushrooms, stems and pieces (drain and save liquid), 2 Tbsp. grated onion, white wine or mushroom liquid.

To prepare pate . . . saute sliced onions in 2 Tbsp. chicken fat in a skillet until golden. Add the liver to the pan and saute until well done. Cool. Now put the liver, onions and drained mushrooms through the food chopper twice. Combine with the remaining chicken fat and the grated onion. If necessary, make the mixture spreadable by adding some of the mushroom liquid or a little white wine. Season to taste at this time.

For pastry covering . . . Prepare 4 sticks of pie crust dough or make your own favorite recipe. Let the dough chill.

Prepare all surfaces of family steak, one side at a time, as follows . . . Thoroughly moisten the meat with water . . . pat the water on from the faucet with your fingers or use a pastry brush or draw a wet fork across the surface. Sprinkle instant meat tenderizer (Adolph's seasoned) evenly, like salt, over the entire surface of the meat. Use no salt. To insure penetration and retain natural juices, pierce meat deeply with a kitchen fork at approximately 1/4 inch intervals. If desired, tie a cord around the meat to give it more of a beef tenderloin shape. Immediately broil steak, turn once, a total of about 20 minutes. Cool. Pre-heat the oven to 450°.

Now roll the pastry into an oblong large enough to enclose the meat. Roll it out on wax paper. From each corner cut out an oblong of pastry . . . this prevents an over thickness of dough when the pastry is folded and wrapped around the meat. Spread the pate gently over the dough almost to the edge. Place the cooled steak in centre of pastry. Bring dough at each end up over meat, then bring up sides and seal all seams by gentle finger pressure. Transfer Wellington to baking sheet inverting it so that seam sides are down. Bake on wax paper.

Combine scraps of pie dough and roll out a double usual thickness. Using fancy cutters or a sharp knife, cut decorative motives . . . leaves . . . from dough. Beat egg and water together. Brush motives with mixture. Arrange decorations on top of Wellington in an artistic way. Brush all sides of pastry with egg wash. Bake in pre-heated oven until pastry is golden brown. Remove to hot platter.

To serve . . . with a very sharp knife cut through crust at 30° angle, carving meat in thin slices across the grain. Note . . . If you have the meat, remove cord as you carve. Serve with hot mustard, horseradish or with Cumberland Sauce.

CUMBERLAND SAUCE
orange marmalade, 1/4 cup
1 tsp. cornstarch, 1/4 cup
1/2 cup water. In saucepan, heat marmalade until smooth. Blend cornstarch and water and stir into the rest of the water. Boil for 1 minute or sherry before serving.

Of course Easter means why not have home-made fragrances alone is worth the effort.

HOT CROSS BUNS . . .
1/2 cup water, 1/4 cup milk
1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup oil, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 cup all-purpose flour, 1/2 cup instant yeast in warm water. Add oil, sugar and salt. Together 1 cup of the flour and stir into the milk mixture and beat the mixture. Add yeast and the oil.

LUSCIOUS!

"BEEF WELLINGTON"—a traditional culinary masterpiece—now comes gracefully and easily to your holiday table, thanks to instant meat tenderizer (Adolph's).

DEAR FOLKS:

Several months ago we turned the house over to the children. The response from them and adults was far beyond our greatest expectations, so we've brought our young friends back into the work. Here they are, and aren't they precious!

DEAR HELOISE:

The spools of thread in my mother's sewing basket used to get tangled. To keep this from happening, I took an egg carton and used a sharp pen to punch a hole in the lid above each compartment. Then I painted the carton a beautiful gold.

When the carton was dry, I put a spool of thread (the colors we use the most) into each compartment and threaded each strand up through the hole above it. I left about six inches of each thread hanging out.

To make sure the egg box doesn't come open I put a rubber band around it.

My sister made a thread box like mine and covered it with pretty paper.

Just saw some lace on the hem of the shirt! That ought to teach him to keep it tucked in!

ON BABY DAYS

DEAR HELOISE:

I am a little shaggy. Do you mind if I give a hint?

When it is raining and I am waiting for the bus, my mother always gives me a plastic bag to put my book in.

This saves them from getting wet, especially the covers, which sometime get soapy. After it stops raining, I fold the plastic bag and put it in one of my books.

Other children might like to try this.

MY NAMED NOTEBOOK

A note to left-handers: When you get your side-liner notebook, instead of writing with the rings at the left, just flip the page over and write on the other side.

Then there are no both-ends things to get in your way.

oil, ½ to ¾ cup sugar, ¼ tsp. salt, 2½ to 4 cups all-purpose flour, ½ to 1 tsp. cinnamon,
2 beaten eggs and ½ cup currants or raisins.
Dissolve yeast in warm water, combine milk, lightly floured board. Roll or pat out into a circle. Make it about ½ inch thick. With a floured 2½-inch bladed cutter cut the dough in rounds.

Arrange buns on greased baking sheet about 1½ inches apart. With wet scissors snip a cross on each bun. Cover and let rise until almost double (about an hour). I save a little of the beaten egg to brush on top of buns just before placing in the oven. Bake in a pre-heated 375° oven for 15 to 20 minutes or until nicely golden. Remove buns to a wire rack to cool.

To frost use about a cup of confectioners' sugar, a little vanilla and enough water to make right consistency. Drizzle over tops of buns. Makes 2 dozen.

MURIEL WILSON Thought for Food

Bread and roll recipes are elastic. One yeast cake instead of two will take longer to make the dough rise but you will find no appreciable difference in the bread. In the above recipe the three eggs will make a little richer bun but for economy you can use just one or two. Simply adjust the flour to a little less liquid. You can substitute mixed glace fruit or cherries for currants or raisins. You can spice to taste.

If you have children be sure and let them have the dough scraps to make their own little buns or dough rabbits. A mother never really knows which happy moment a child will tuck away in his heart forever.

Bride's Corner

TIPS AND TRICKS . . .

Soak rhubarb for a few minutes before cooking . . . It cuts the sharpness and takes less sugar to sweeten.

A little grated onion and brown sugar enhance the flavor of canned baked beans.
Use a vegetable brush to clean the food grater.

Place a vanilla bean in the sugar canister for a delicate, true vanilla flavor in baked goods.

To improvise an angel food baking tin . . . place a 6-inch concentrated fruit tin in the centre of a round roaster. Place something heavy in the little tin to keep it weighted down. (A few small stones will do.)

HELP FOR HOMEMAKERS

DEAR HELOISE:

I am a 10-year-old girl and I wear heavy socks.
They are too thick to roll

I paired them and took clothespins (the snap kind) and pinned the socks to-

A MAD PAD PAD

DEAR HELOISE:

I am 12 years old and have a hint to share about homework pads.

You can make your own:
first, cut any kind of blank paper to the desired size.
Straighten the paper into a neat pack. Two clothespins will hold it together. Glue the top of the pack thinly with quick-setting strong glue or rubber cement, and let dry.

A drop of cake coloring mixed with the glue will make it red if that is preferred. A strip of cheseecloth or gauze on the glued edges and another coat of glue over it will prevent the pad from cracking in half.

I am eight years old and I am in the third grade.

I eat peanut butter and and my mother sometimes finds the peanut butter dif-

So one day she put the bread was frozen. I tried it, too. It spread much better and didn't tear the bread

LOOK, NO SPLINTERS!

DEAR HELOISE:

If your broom handle is splintery, cut a piece of cloth, five inches wide by 28 inches long. Fold it length-seam along the edge and across one end. Use a yard-

Slip the cloth tube over the broom handle. Use a

It not only gives you a

but also a colorful one.

GINNIE BEARDSLEY makes a voyage

You can have your slow boats to China. Give me a nice, comfortable, cargo cruise through British Columbia waters, with plenty of stops at all the little ports where the arrival of the Prince is a highlight of the week, and everyone turns out to meet friends, pick up freight, or just get a look at who's travelling.

"Who's travelling" on the Prince Rupert-bound trip I took included as varied an assortment as one could wish for: a Seattle couple, Alaska-bound along the same routes I was taking; a world-travelled pair currently based in South America, on a visit to their daughter who had married a Canadian in Hawaii and settled at Bella Coola; a salesman who would disembark his car at Prince Rupert and work back via Prince George to Vancouver; a young travel agent who had decided to work in the canneries for the summer to help finance a return to school and live as a geography teacher; a teacher from the Mountains of Mourne; prospectors bound for Alice Arm; a New Yorker who had married a Labrador trapper lately turned British Columbia troller . . . and others.

The others included some 30 Indian children, immovable-bound to Namu, Bella Coola, and Butedale from the residential school at Port Alberni. Adults who like myself are not accustomed to too close proximity to children, especially in large batches, might be forgiven for shuddering at sight of such a large aggregation; but I can truthfully say that I have never seen a better behaved group. Without giving the impression of being crushed or intimidated, they were perfectly obedient, respectful, and apparently most happily disposed toward the very quietly spoken, mild-mannered lady who was shepherding them homeward.

Pot-luck in the matter of room-mates could have resulted in my being paired with a fragile, shivering, old lady who'd got pneumonia at the very thought of having a single port open, thereby driving me to roll up in a blanket on deck if I wanted any air. It was an immense relief, therefore, when I returned after a spell of watching cargo load, to see that my shipmate was very obviously an outdoor girl who could be expected to condone if not necessarily share my enthusiasm for sea breezes. A well stuffed khaki pack-sack, with the words "Western Montana Rocky Mountaineers" on it, lay on the window seat. On the floor, a couple of hard-boiled eggs were rolling idly about. The owner turned out to be a solidly built, apple-cheeked girl in her early twenties. She was a music teacher who spent all her holidays seeing as much country as possible, via the thumb. Her system, mostly, was to find the depot from which the largest number of trucks departed, find one going where she was headed, and ask for a ride. These arrangements apparently worked quite well for her, in spite of the horrified reception their telling got from more than one fellow passenger. She had travelled the western United States fairly extensively and had been to England.

Despite considerable tongue-clucking from old ladies and a brotherly lecture or two, we left her in Prince Rupert looking for a truck that would take her to Prince George.

And the hard-boiled eggs? Oh, they were just a snack in case she got hungry between meals.

Snacks we didn't need, and hungry we didn't get—aboard the Northland Prince. The brochure is not kidding when it says "excellent meals." On this vessel, certainly the company feeds you as if you were being fattened up to be the main dish at a cannibal feast. You can, if you wish, eat nearly enough to give you strength to man the choker at a logging camp, three times a day, then have a late night "snack" that would be quite a respectable lunch for a more sedentary type. Of course one can always say "no"—I suppose. But who has that much power as course follows generous course?

In my own case, it seemed prudent to store up a little fat for possible lean pickings the following week. Sources in Alaska had assured me that it wasn't really true that carrots were $5 a bunch in the 48th state, but I wasn't taking any chances, so ate like a bear before freeze-up.

One reason for the late ration of food may be to get the passengers good and sleepy. These are not social cruises in the sense of dancing on the decks, and there is no bar nor organized activity as such. The fun you have you make. There is ample provision for comfort, indoors and out, and it's up to you to take it from there. Ship's personnel are quite informal and helpful, glad to join in a game or shore-side activity when off duty. And of course we all got a tour of the engine-room. I am afraid these very helpful and patient explanations are totally wasted on me because any kind of industrial noise seems to deafen me completely. I stand there, notebook and pencil in hand, smiling and nodding appreciatively, all the while not knowing whether the speaker is talking amps, kilowatts, horsepower, rpm's or what. The resultant copy is something less than technically informative, thus: This is a Diesel engine from ~~Stam~~ ~~Stam~~ ~~Stam~~. They refine their own oil for it. It has three generators and makes enough power to light Port Moody.

Conviviality or not, from my limited experience, seems to take a cue from the mood of the captain. Some of those on the west coast like nothing better than a wheelhouse full of admiring females, hanging on the master's every word. This captain wasn't like that. I think if any admiring females had tried to storm the barricades put up to keep the captain's sanctum sacred, they would have been pitched right on overboard. I felt I had achieved a social success pretty close to being presented at Court when the stern features relaxed in something approaching a chuckle as he evidently recognized me one morning as the same who'd been supervising the unloading of cargo in the wee, small hours, tastefully attired in a white coat over a black nightgown.

Continuous running and wide variability of cargo quantities make a certain number of port calls at night inevitable. Naturally, one doesn't want to miss anything on a sightseeing trip, so one gets up—clad as may be. Bella Coola and Alice Arm will thus always bring to mind the bright glare of lights on hold and dock, and darkness all around and beyond.

Namu and Butedale I see in front of me in technicolor. At the former port we lost most of our Indian children, and the bright clothing of both waiting parents and arriving youngsters made a vivid group of tableaux. This was a port so full of dockside interest that none of us bothered to go much beyond the immediate shipside. A few steps away fish were being unloaded from a packer, and we could watch their ascent to the scales for grading.

Our American passengers got quite a thrill as one of them counted seven bald eagles—their first sight of this impressive national emblem bird which feeds ravenously on the cannery refuse.

The new cannery (replacing one destroyed by fire), and the houses and other buildings are pleasantly painted in green and white. Part of life afloat was a small fish-buying houseboat, pictorially reflected in the calm, sunlit evening waters. Obliviously, it stayed at its mooring until I had taken its picture, then slipped out to sea.

At Butedale, the whole dock seemed to be covered with fishnet. A seine net was spread out, undergoing repairs and being rewound as they were completed. The golden wood of the floats was picked up in the shirts of one or two of the handsome Indian teen-agers who were relaxing in the afternoon sun, sitting on the bunched netting, idly flirting with girls and generally enjoying the fact of school just being out.

Some of the boys who were resplendent in red shirts turned suddenly shy on seeing they were special targets of the camera, and started making a game of hiding behind their less colorfully clad fellows.

The wide falls near this village is a justifiably famous scenic landmark.

Tragic news of the slide at Ocean Falls brought memories of zig-zagging up for a walk of perhaps a mile between the tiered houses. Looking down, I had the feeling that if there were someone good and strong on deck to catch me, I could almost jump back onto the ship again. If we missed the deadline and were threatened with the necessity to swim the last few yards.

Swim was something I didn't do at Ocean Falls, much to my disappointment. Having heard for years about what wonderful swimmers come out of Ocean Falls, I had my swim suit at the ready, prepared to plunge in and hope some reflected glory would rub off on my amateur efforts. Alas, whenever those champs do their training, it's not at 7 a.m., for all was quiet and tightly locked at the pool.

At Kitimat we had better luck in the duck and splash department. Fortunately there was a lot of cargo for this port, and we were able to get about four hours ashore. A little corporate promotion on my part resulted in a limit taxi load for Lakehouse, and we were soon splashing happily, along with what must have been a very satisfactory crowd from the management's point of view. However, the pool is indeed "giant size"—and not a giant pint either—so there was plenty of space to enjoy the slide and to swim lengths without too many collisions.

Our driver, who was enjoying the change from just showing people around the townsite's different levels and running back and forth in the plants, drove us beyond the springs to where new highway was replacing the site where the road fell in a couple of years ago, and also showed us the lovely, tree-framed, sandy-beached lake.

On our way back, we had a good look at the planned three-unit townsite. With "instant towns" much in the news these days, it was interesting to see how this one looks. It looks highly satisfactory to me. The divided purpose arrangement should certainly keep property values sound, and apparently the residents think so, for we were told that they are buying their homes in gratifying numbers. Houses appear to be well built. One drawback is apparently that raising of permanent gardens has not proved too satisfactory. I don't know why, because advance planning of the town layout was such that no industrial smoke can possibly drift into the residential and commercial areas. However, experimental gardening continues.

Life in many a single industry town could be pretty grim during a period of enforced idleness, but not, evidently, in Kitimat. Summer of '61—"the year of the big lay-off"—when a rock break in the tunnel from Kemano was undergoing repairs—was evidently a delightful one for weather and the residents proceeded to have a whale of a time. Knowing that they would be back on the job again shortly, and that all house payments were suspended, they proceeded to enjoy the campsites, and were all sporting fine tans when work started again.

Normal activity for a visitor to Prince Rupert would include tours of the fish processing plants, and to Columbia Cellulose pulp mill.

Given sunshine and some nice picture clouds, the journey up Portland Canal could be one of the loveliest on the coast. The steep mountains, rising abruptly from dark and silent waters, the frequent waterfalls and the snowcrowning visible on the higher peaks, add up to a picture panorama hard to beat. I gambled on the weather and lost. We had the odd lovely view, but too much of that grey curtain in between.

I can't tell you anything at first hand about Granduc, because I wasn't where the slide slid. Neither was I at Meziaden Lake, which is said to be perfectly gorgeous, nor on the Stewart-Canniar highway. Time did not permit. I have instead an impression of a town with a lot of yesterday which have failed to turn into the golden promise of tomorrow. We were told that Granduc had $50 million to spend, that so and so had taken up all this property, such and such had this. I noticed most vividly an old 30-room hotel, with a beer license and a for sale sign which had apparently been there some time. An instant town will be a distinct improvement.

Across the border at Hyder (some New Yorker's pronunciation of "Haida" no doubt) we were allowed to buy American beer for 50c, urged to buy some similarly overpriced souvenirs, and told that Hyder was getting ready for big developments to come. It has a lot of getting ready to do.

It was darkening when we docked at Port Simpson, but it was encouraging to get an impression of much home improvement, as considerable green and orange paint could be seen across the stretch of water which separated us from the small peninsula on which the Indian village is located. Some of us started up the dock with the idea of closer investigation, but rain, high heels and the spacing of the plankings slowed us so much that the whistle blew for all aboard before we touched shore.

Subsequent news of a pilot program of raising living standards and increasing employment among this band of Tsimshians is good indeed. They have already proved themselves good businessmen in marketing of timber, and are thus on the way to an important form of integration into the economic realities of twentieth century British Columbia.

Back in Prince Rupert, my friend the fisherman's wife and I decided against an unescorted foray into Prince Rupert's Saturday night life, settled for a good night's sleep and were up beating on the door of the very excellent Museum of Northern British Columbia when it opened.

We had a most interesting interview with Danish-born T. H. Sorensen, who is general sales manager of the flourishing Fishermen's Co-op. This hardy organization, which is one of the brighter spots in the British Columbia commercial fisheries picture, looms large indeed in Prince Rupert, with between 2,000 and 2,500 members, over 500 employees, a wholesale buying organization which dates back to the '30s, a mammoth supermarket and department store, oil and gas sales—all in addition to the big fish buying and processing facilities in Rupert. Sales office in Vancouver will be bolstered by construction of a half million dollar plant.

A water taxi cruise, on which we were the only passengers, gave us an excellent impression of Prince Rupert's fine and beautiful harbor—but alas! not any sunset pictures. The skipper was most obliging in extending the trip a little, since it was the last one of the day, but he couldn't coax the sun out even a little bit.

ing on the abstract, are vivid, gay, and filled with light. She loves to paint, and has had several pictures hung in various shows.

Dr. Roe's contributions to the cottage interior include some very handsome cabinet work. Tall bookshelves, a firewood box, a corner cupboard, all have the solid antique look of Jacobean craftsmanship.

"You had to learn that sort of thing in the old days on the prairie," he said, "otherwise you didn't survive."

Frank and Doris Roe are not the only inhabitants of the home. They belong to, and share their quarters with, Timothy Nimrod Kilson Roe, and Johnny White Socks Roe, who, frankly, seem to rule the roost. Timothy has been there the longer, and is large, handsome, and tabby-grey. Johnny W.S., somewhat the same in color, is a more recent comer, and has something of a history. He was first seen about a year ago, haunting the premises and looking rather wild and very hungry. As soon as it became evident that he really didn't belong to anybody, Doris commenced setting out saucers of milk, and so in due course the Roes presently had two cats. This they didn't want, they thought, so one day they gathered up Mr. White Socks and took him in to the SPCA on Burnside, to ask if another home could be found for him. At least, that was the intention, but they didn't get that far. At that time the SPCA was still building part of its new home, and just as the Roes arrived, carrying Johnny, an electric saw started up nearby with the usual blood-curdling screech. The cat leaped away like a streak of lightning, and disappeared.

TIME WENT BY, the days became weeks, and the Roes felt badly. What good to have rescued and fed poor Johnny White Socks if he were to become a homeless stray once more? However, all was well. Three weeks and three days later, having crossed all the main highways and the diversified country which lies between Burnside and Cadboro Bay Road, there he was again, in good condition, merely pretty tired, and again very hungry.

After which feat—and one always marvels that animals manage this sort of thing, whether it be five miles or five hundred—the Roes accepted the fact that they do have two cats. One surmises they are not too unhappy about this. The cats are pleased too.

Congress Hall, the proud 23 Juli Strasse where Hitler once marched his armies; and I cannot imagine this city was ever the victim of heavy bombing. We cross a narrow river and beyond this point the land is barren. Three barbed-wire fences appear. I am now in East Berlin.

Friedrichstrasse, once the centre of Berlin, is now a heavily-guarded check point where I stand waiting while the VOPOs (East German People's Police) check my passport and purse. I take my leave glancing back upon sobbing women and a group of American girls who think this is exciting.

The greyness of unkempt buildings surrounds me as I walk to a small, dingy restaurant which boasts to be the best in East Berlin. I meet my friends—their faces, though smiling at my presence, are marked with strain and depression. Walking to the centre of East Berlin we see no Saturday shoppers, only VOPOs in their uniforms.

Now riding in an obsolete bus to the forest, the only place that could be somewhere other than East Berlin, we climb a hill where we view the lakes. How peaceful here without "big brother" watching.

We spend the evening in one of the few better dance clubs; this one ironically called The Hawaii. Here I observe the East Berliners while they try to forget the wall exists. The dancing is mechanical, the Russian wine sour, and the people either full of wine or in depression.

During the entire evening curious eyes watch me. Many ask questions of world happening and we compare my answers to the propaganda they are fed. They complain of having to work six days a week; of being unable to afford a car—which they would have to apply for four years in advance, even for one of the "plastic" cars East Germany is manufacturing.

I speak with one boy who spent one year in prison for a derogatory statement against Ulbricht and another who spent two years behind bars for walking too close to the "wall!" While talking with these people they are constantly looking to see if "big brother" is listening, as the dance hall is infested with informers.

One o'clock. I am tired and a little depressed, the dance band, which is forbidden to play American music, has vanished and our little group moves out onto the street. Silence, except for the moaning of the last tram. We walk home.

Morning, and snow is falling. We board the tram—direction Friedrichstrasse. Sunday morning, and I hear no bells tolling but look upon ruins of a once-ornate church. Still I see few people. The train stops and my friends are asking me when I will return. We shake hands and the look of envy on their faces for me who can walk across that mass of concrete and barbed wire restricting their lives is pathetic. They glance towards the West and see progress: the tall, modern buildings which the wall cannot hide, and then look back on a ragged city and a tired people. I take my leave.

Now back in the other world, I find delight in a new building, eat good food, and look at contented faces.

During my first visits to East Berlin I came back to the West depressed and utterly angry at the whole situation and vowed not to return; but somehow I have to return for in this tragedy I find a conquered people whom we need to care about. I have always found that no matter how depressed the East Berliners are they always have a new joke to tell me about "the wall or Ulbricht."

East Berlin is probably the most woeful city in Europe for it stopped building, expanding and breathing 20 years ago.

Even though the East Berliners are being fed a tremendous volume of propaganda and the children are being indoctrinated in youth groups (which they have to attend if they go to high school) the East Berliners themselves are looking to the west for help.

I wish every Canadian would come to Berlin. How much they would appreciate Canada!

By MONTE ROBERTS

Consider the perils of progress. They are greater than you think. Some of the perils of progress have been receiving consideration of late. There is a little muttering going on about automation and the consequent decimation of the labor force, and the hydrogen bomb and the consequent decimation of the (allegedly) human race, and integration versus disintegration.

Peril matters, these, while the real perils of progress go virtually ignored—because they have sneaked in so insidiously, under the guise of innocent improvements.

Two examples of progressive perils have gone almost unnoticed right here, in the city of Victoria, which is supposed to be the home of the Legislative Assembly where the guardians of human rights and privileges carry on their deliberations.

Then let them deliberate on these two perils—and there are many more from which to choose.

Peril Number One: The elimination of the garbage scow.

Peril Number Two: The advent of the self-loading, self-dumping, umpteen-hundred-foot log barge.

Why, you may ask in all innocence, are these projects—very, very, progressive as they seem—actually perilous?

Aspect 1: Duck-feeding.

Aspect 2: Log Boom-Watching.

Possibly it might be a wee bit difficult to correlate these two aspects with the elimination of the garbage scow and the advent of the umpteen-hundred-foot log barge.

Once upon time, not long ago, the residue of Victorian meals—as well as those of surrounding districts—was carried out to sea in open barges or, as the less cultured might call them, scows.

Seagulls from many miles around were wont to ride serenely to sea upon these scows, feasting daintily upon whatever portions of grapefruit rind and last Sunday's roast met their fancy.

Prior to their ocean voyage, the gulls would gather at the garbage wharf, anxiously watching the full course meals being loaded, and picking up a tid-bit or two as an appetit.

What, you ask, has this to do with duck-feeding?

The answer is simple. While the gulls were seeking their sustenance at sea, the better citizens of this area were proceeding to Beacon Hill Park, there to feed the ducks.

With chunks of bread and grain and succulent morsels dear to the duck's heart.

Then came the debut of the new, all new, garbage wharf.

Where everything is so antiseptic and quickly disposed of that the garbage scows were dishonorably discharged of their duties.

And the seagulls dishonorably relieved of their accustomed cuisine.

They muscled in on duck territory in Beacon Hill Park.

No longer can men, women, and sometimes even children, feed the ducks in Beacon Hill Park.

The gulls from the Garbage Wharf mob have taken over the territory. Feed a bird in Beacon Hill Park, you feed a gull, or else. See?

Thus is ending the grand Victoria pastime of duck-feeding.

Aspect Number Two is even worse.

Many people, in past years, have graduated from bird-watching to log-boom watching.

Bird-watching can be trying on the eyesight and hard on the nerves, causing twitches when a companion bird-watcher says he sighted a middle-fisted snipe when you were sure it was nothing but a common yellow-wax thing.

Log-boom watching, on the other hand, is so soothing it is close to therapeutic.

A much-favored log-boom watching area was

There it used to be possible to watch log booms without a program. But there was relaxation to be found in speculating on why log booms which were exact twins were being towed in opposite directions.

Now, alas, log boom watching is in a steep decline. More and more logs are passing, far out to sea, stacked on barges which are approaching the proportions of TSS Canberra.

UNDERSEA KINGDOMS

WONDROUS WORLD OF FISHES.—There's a title to intrigue. Add to this a magnificently produced volume printed on the finest glossy paper, and with lavish use of superb color photography, and you've got the ingredients of a best-seller.

The publishers—The National Geographic Society—are old hands at this sort of thing. Like the supermarkets, they know exactly what appeals to the mass market: a generous something-for-everyone display, attractively packaged.

And that's the trouble with Wondrous World of Fishes. Far too much variety has been packed into its 350 pages.

We are tantalizingly introduced to the mysterious, beautiful, horror-packed underwater world with its fascinating inhabitants going about their deadly fish-eats-fish business in horrible silence.

This section of the book is utterly absorbing, and if the publishers had only devoted the entire volume to this aspect, they would have filled a need by providing a mass-appeal reference work of immense value.

Instead, the subject is barely touched upon; condensed to make room for a welter of largely irrelevant material.

Wondrous World of Fishes deals only with waters in and around North America and Hawaii. But that takes in a lot of water.

In order to find out a little about under-surface life in the area, the reader must wade through whole sections on angling, deep-sea fishing, ice-fishing, fly-tying, circus-type aquariums like Marineland—and even a section on cooking fish, including recipes.

The result is a mish-mash that fails to satisfy. The keen student of nature is surely not interested in the "sport" of killing marlin. And vice versa. And there are better recipes in any number of cookery books—where they belong.

I recently saw a slim, profusely illustrated volume (on sale in supermarkets) that purported to "cover" all the major religions of the world! That, together with a popular encyclopedia and a handful of Readers Digest condensed books, may now be joined by Wondrous World of Fishes. The whole lot tastefully and colorfully displayed on a shelf in the "rec-room."

I predict a massive sale for this fishy product. If you care to join the throng the National Geographic Society, Dept. 220, Washington, D.C., 20036, will be delighted to oblige upon receipt of $1.75. It is not available from any other source.—E.D.W.H.

Twice-Told Tales . . .

IRVING'S FUR TRADERS IN A REVISED EDITION

Early Pacific Coast history makes fascinating reading when told by a cultured 19th century lawyer—Washington Irving, of Sleepy Hollow fame.

Jacob Astor to establish a widespread fur trading empire in Oregon.

Irving wrote the account at Astor's request. "The old gentleman has applied to me repeatedly in the matter, offering to furnish abundance of materials in letters, journals and verbal narratives, and to pay liberally for time and trouble," Irving wrote to his nephew, Pierre Munro, in 1834.

ASTORIA or Anecdotes of an Enterprise Beyond the Rocky Mountains; by Washington Irving. University of Oklahoma Press; $16.25.

He not only had access to original records, but a surprising first-hand knowledge of Canadian fur trading as a background to the adventure. His chapter on the fur traders of Montreal is a delight, after the usual dullish accounts of most Canadian history texts.

Day-to-day accounts of the incredible journeys by land and sea, and explanations of the curious double-dealing which helped to bring the expeditions to a disastrous end, are the basis of the story, especially interesting in view of the fact that our own history might have been drastically different had the Astorians succeeded.

As a bonus, there are Irving's excellent, stylish word portraits of the colorful characters involved, from Astor himself, to the "nabobs" of the Montreal fur trade, and the Canadian voyageurs who were, even then, fast becoming "a forgotten race, or remembered, like their associates, the Indians, among the poetical images of past times . . ."

This edition, edited by Edgeley W. Todd, Jr., as the dust jacket says, thoroughly annotated. The average reader will have to be firm-minded in ignoring the maddening foot notes on every page, a number of which are devoted to minute differences between the first and second editions. Irving's text is quite literate enough to make sense without the knowledge that "the" should have been "their" in the author's revised edition.—MAUREEN DUFFY

NEW TITLES at a GLANCE

SONG AND SOLILQUIES, by Margaret Burden Keller. Vantage Press, $1.

Voice by a Victoria woman who has made a well-deserved name for herself. Her chief charm to this reviewer is her sure touch, and her ability to find poetry in simple things.

THE GREEN FIG TREE, by Michael Farr. MacMillan Co. of Canada, $1.50.

Handsomely gotten up, and with definite touches of magic—

"Someone has gone into the woods
And thrown up a fistful of crows."

The poet has an odd off-beat manner of almost but not quite rhyming which, unorthodox, is yet right and satisfies the ear.

SONG OF THE SCORPION, by Percy Adams. Published by the author (paper-back), $1.

THE FOUNTAIN IN THE SQUARE, by R. H. Graves. Banner Press, $1.

A very generous book of verse, sometimes as many as three poems on a page, and every one a gem. The work of this English poetess has the same rare quality that distinguished the famous Edna St. Vincent Millay. It is poignant, sensitive, and deeply satisfying. The book is a treasure to add to any library.

A BOUGH OF NEEDLES, by Myrtle Bergren. Progress Books. (Unpriced.)

Eleven Canadian short stories which deal faithfully with life as lived in the rural working communities of B.C., the fruit growers, the ranchers, the loggers. The outstanding quality of the collection is perhaps the fine simplicity with which the tales are told, suiting as no other style could the subject matter of each one.

SWINGS AND ROUNDABOUTS, by A. de Courcy Denny. Greenwich Book Publishers, $1.75.

Dr. Denny, flyer, actor and author, resident of North Vancouver Island, has here a group of short stories of which his best are those dealing with airmen and aircraft—subjects which he obviously knows well. A very good little book to set out on the bedside table for your overnight guest!

THE INSIDE PASSAGE, by Anthony Bailey. Collier-MacMillan, $3.95.

Excellent account, told with humor and skill, of the author's adventuring by boat along the Island Waterways behind the Atlantic Coast. Illustrated with good photographs and some delightful pen and ink drawings for chapter headings. For the boating enthusiast.

SWITZERLAND—EXAMPLE OF CULTURAL CO-EXISTENCE, by Kenneth D. McRae. Canadian Institute of International Affairs, by Kenneth D. McRae, $1.

Carefully researched study of the Swiss answer to some of the same bi-lingual and bi-cultural problems that beset Canada.

TOPPING'S TRAIL, by Elsie G. Turnbull. Mitchell Press, $1.75.

A carefully compiled history of the city of Trail, B.C., its founder, Eugene Sayre Topping, native of New York State, its growth and development as a smelter city. Good period photographs illustrate a vital record which is part of B.C.'s heritage.—V.C.

In the Style of Jules Verne

If you can imagine Jules Verne alive today and writing a novel about the race between the Americans and the Russians to be first on the moon, it would probably be a book like Pierre Boulle's new and genuinely exciting Garden on the Moon. Boulle is a resourceful French writer who relies on two staples which leap all language barriers—suspenseful storytelling and ingenious plotting.

In recent years he has fallen prey to the wonders of the space age now opening before us. This is not to say that he is attracted to astronautics in the strictly scientific sense but rather that he uses it the same way he uses dramatic current events—as springboards for his fiction.

In The Bridge on the River Kwai, for example, he demonstrated what he could do with a war situation. His last novel, Planet of the Apes, was his first to blast off into outer space, and it cleverly visualized a planet on which human and simian roles were reversed. Perhaps he peered too far into the future: at all events, the book attracted less attention than it deserved. Garden on the Moon makes no such mistake. It is set in the past and present, moving to the immediate future when Americans and Russians prepare to speed the first explorers to the moon.

RACE to the MOON

GARDEN ON THE MOON, by Pierre Boulle.
New York: Vanguard Press. 315 pp. $4.95.

In the story both countries battle feverishly for the signal honor of getting there first. Each is using German scientists recruited from the Second World War rocket station at Peenemünde. The leading American engineer, in fact, is a German V2 expert who will remind you of Werner von Braun.

This, then, is the outline of the story—the race between two groups of scientists, each charged with upholding the prestige of its country. Boulle crowds his canvas with characters, machines, and even incorporates excerpts from speeches by the American President and the Soviet Premier.

In the last third of the novel we move into the near future. Here it suddenly dawned on me that Boulle, whether consciously or unconsciously, was using the Jules Verne technique. Do you remember a marvelous but now forgotten Verne thriller called The Purchase of the North Pole, in which a syndicate of financiers, led by a mad mathematical genius, buys the mineral rights to the North Pole and then builds a deep tunnel near the African equator? The idea is to fire an enormous charge that would shift the earth from its axis and turn the Pole into a temperate zone. By the time the rest of the world realizes what this would do to the oceans and continents the shot is ready for firing.

No such outlandish event occurs in the Boulle (we live, after all, in a more sophisticated age); but a denouement no less unexpected occurs. Boulle milks every bit of drama out of the moon race, up to and including cliff-hanging countdowns. The climax is a dilly, and here Boulle leaves Verne behind and becomes himself alone. Those last serene pages, lyrical yet logical, provide the perfect ending for this thriller of the year.

I hope that astronauts chosen for the moon trip will make a point of reading this novel. It will give them an indication of the imagination and vocabulary they will need to describe the incomparable spectacles they will be fortunate enough to behold.—JOHN BARNHAM.

With a Dogged German

"Here is an untouched island in an engulfing sea of civilization, the biggest natural history museum in the world, and yet I am certain that before long we shall know more about the moon than about this part of the world where primitive humans live."

The island in question, in New Guinea, and the author of the above comment is Heinrich Harrer, the intrepid German who explored Tibet (and wrote a book about it) and now does the same for New Guinea. He is justified in his sarcastic comment: ours is not an age of terrestrial exploration. We are more interested in the underwater world or outer space.

Impelled, however, by his desire to set foot on parts of our globe never before trodden by a white man, Harrer crossed the broad waistline

to the JOURNEY to the STONE AGE

of New Guinea from north to south accompanied by a couple of Australians. Everything he saw was new to him, since the route passed through virgin territory. His prime objectives were to scale an unclimbed 15,000-foot peak in the Carstens Range which bisects the interior, and to spend time with a primitive people who had not seen whites before.

He achieved both aims, but at some cost to himself. Harrer was able to dragoon natives into serving as porters for his equipment, but on route to the peak he missed his footing and fell into a waterfall. Severely injured, he was carried back to Hollandia on the coast, where he recovered in a Dutch hospital. Then, with Teutonic thoroughness, he returned to where he'd left off and resumed his journey.

The narrative is tendered in the form of a diary, which conveys a high degree of immediacy. Harrer's route traversed a green hell of steamy jungle swept by tropical rains and laced by barely fordable streams. He finally reached his peak, pyramidal in shape, and climbed it. Nothing, but nothing, would have kept him from that summit.

The Stone Age men of the title were the Denis, a friendly people despite their fearsome appearance in the book's excellent photographs. Yes, they had never beheld a white person before. "When they saw us bathing they were so astonished that they could hardly close their mouths," Harrer reports. "People with white bodies seem to belong to the sphere of magic and miracles for them."

Nor had the Denis ever seen the like of his steel axes before. They did, however, have axes of their own, which they laboriously shaped from a deep blue stone. Harrer watched them doing this and felt, not without a reason, that he was observing a page from the primitive past. While the Denis admired his steel axes for the sharpness and high polish of their blades, they could not grasp his explanation that the steel axes could do the work twice as fast their stone axes. "Why?" they asked. "Why should a thing be done quicker?"

There, I suggest, you have the real gulf between the Stone Age and the Steel Age. Are we sure that we have the correct answer to that "Why?"—JB.

Answer to Last Week's Puzzle

With Patience, Paper and Pencil You Can Answer the Question . . .

You have to hand it to the early Christian missionaries: they were ingenious. They accepted the old Roman, pagan, festival of the winter solstice, "The birthday of the unconquered Sun" and converted it so that it became our Christian Christmas, the birthday of an unconquered Son—this time.

And when they found that the heathen Saxons, who over-ran England, worshipped a goddess of spring named Eostra, they took her name for the Christian festival that occurred at that time of the year, the festival of the rising of the Lord from the dead.

Certainly there is a fine appropriateness about it. At the time when the flowers spring to sight from their dead-looking, buried seeds, we remember our Lord springing in life and beauty from his grave. But that was just coincidence: the date of Easter was not set to agree with the festival of Eostra; it was fixed by Christians about the Mediterranean Sea who had never heard of Eostra. All that the Saxons contributed was the name of the day and certain symbols of spring, such as the lily, the egg, and the rabbit.

How then was the date of the Christian festival arrived at? How can we tell what day Easter will be, next year or ten years from now?

It is a long story, and you will need pencil and paper before it is all told. Perhaps you should get them ready now. Here we go!

The crucifixion of Jesus was recorded by the Evangelists and dated by them according to the Jewish calendar as on the 14th day, or full, of the moon Nisan, which is the time of the ancient Passover feast, called in Aramaic pascha, which gives our word pascal for things connected with Easter, and the French word Pâques for Easter Day.

The Passover was kept on the full moon following the vernal equinox—that day of spring when we have just 12 hours of day and 12 hours of night.

So the early Christians, at the eastern end of the Mediterranean, kept the Crucifixion Day always on the full moon following the vernal equinox. They saw a beautiful analogy between the Passover lamb sacrificed in Egypt, whose blood, smeared on the door of the Israelite's house, caused the Destroying Angel to pass over it without harming those within, and the Saviour spilling his blood upon the cross to avert the death penalty for their sins. (So Paul writes, "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us; therefore let us keep the feast.")

But at the western end of the Mediterranean, around Rome, they argued like this: Christ died on a Friday and rose on a Sunday. We ought always to commemorate his death and resurrection of Friday and Sunday respectively. So we decree that Easter shall be kept on the Sunday following the Passover moon—that was the full moon on or after the vernal equinox, remember.

Well, they argued about it for 300 years. The people who insisted on the 14th day of Nisan, regardless of the day of the week, were nicknamed by the Romans "the Four-teenths"—in Latin, Quartodecimani. I don't know what they called the Roman opposition; probably the "Sundayers," or some such name. They were strong on nicknames in those days. There were black eyes and bloody noses over this long quarrel, and if you find it difficult to believe that people would get so worked up over so small a matter, I advise you to read Hendrik van Loon's "Lives"—the chapter where they invite the Bishop of Bithynia to dine with Athanasius.

In the year 325 a council met at Nicaea in Asia Minor, and, since the Emperor Constantine was there in person, it discreetly settled for the Western point of view, that Easter should always fall on a Sunday, and Good Friday on Friday. Though, as a matter of fact, the Quartodecimans held out for another century in small pockets of resistance here and there.

Are you clear so far? Easter is the Sunday after the first full moon on or after the spring equinox.

But the Equinox comes sometimes on the 20th instead of the 21st of March, for it wobbles a few hours this way and that. Well, that was too complicated: the good bishops said, "For ecclesiastical purposes we'll always call the 21st of March the equinox."

Now we have three sets of figures to juggle with to arrive at the date of next Easter: the day of the calendar year; the dates of the full moons, and the day of the week. A: there are not an even number of weeks in the year—much less an even number of full moons—it follows that Easter will fall on different days in different years.

However, a bright astronomer in Greece, called Meton, discovered 24 centuries ago that there are almost exactly 235 new moons in 19 years, so that if January 1st was a new moon this year, it will be new moon again 19 years from now. This 19 years is called the Metonic Cycle.

Moreover, you can count on January 1 being a Sunday one year out of every seven, on an average, since there are only seven days in the week for it to choose among.

Here we shall have to explain about Leap Year.

Julius Caesar found the year a bit too long. The calendar did not get around to March 21 until two months after the equinox. In other words, he found the equinox was happening in January. "This is terrible!" he said. "This won't do at all. We shall have to drop two months. Here it is the equinox, and you are calling it January 21, when it ought to be March 21. We shall have to forget about the intervening days this year, and call this March 21. Then we will cut the year down from 366 days to 365½ by having 206 days only once in four years. That will keep it right."

It did keep it nearly right, but not quite. The calendar was still losing three days every four centuries, and by 1582 Pope Gregory XIII noticed that it was ten days slow again. He did what Julius Caesar had done, he said, "Forget about those ten days. We'll call tomorrow October 15 instead of October 5." There were riots: people went about crying, "The Pope has taken ten days out of our lives! Give us back our ten days!"—especially, I expect, those children whose birthday came on October 6.

Good, old, conservative England did not adopt the New Style calendar until 1750, and the Greek Church has not adopted it yet, which is why our Ukrainian neighbors keep Christmas 13 days after the rest of us.

Now, at least, let us try to find out on what day Easter will fall next year. The formula was devised by Gauss, the German mathematician and student of magnetism, after whom the Gauss magnetic mine was named, and its antidote, the de-gaussing cable.

First, to place 1906 in the Metonic Cycle: divide 1906 by 19. Take the remainder (not the quotient, but the remainder, what is "left over"), put it in the margin of your paper, and call it Exhibit A.

Now for the leap year—Pope Gregory's adjustment. Divide 1906 by 100. Call the quotient B, the remainder C. Now divide B by 4. Call the quotient D, the remainder E.

Now divide (B plus 8) by 25. Call the quotient F. Divide (B-F plus 1) by 3 and call the quotient G.

Divide (19 times A plus B minus D minus G plus 15) by 30 and call the remainder H.

Divide C by 4, call quotient J, remainder K.

Divide (32 plus twice E plus twice J minus H minus K) by 7; call remainder L.

Divide (A plus 11 times H plus 22 times L) by 451 and call quotient M.

Divide (H plus L minus I plus 114) by 31; call the quotient N and the remainder P.

Then N will be the number of the month of the year in which Easter will fall, and P plus 1 will be the day of that month.

This rule has no exceptions; but sometimes it is almost as quick to look it up in your diary or an Anglican Prayer Book.

A Lady was Deluged, City was Billed

"There was a flutter of excitement at Reformed Episcopal Church as the bride-elect reached the door and approached the chancel by the centre aisle, accompanied by her brother, Douglas, in full Highland costume.

"She seemed a picture, so exquisite and becoming was her toilette. Her costume was the richest and purest-white duchesse satin, and fitted perfectly. The skirt was relieved with white spotted tulle, embroidered with gold and white chenille, and caught up with sprays of white lilies, and rows of white satin, artistically and judiciously disposed.

"At one side was a girle of pearls. The train was full court length, and was also relieved with delicate tulle puffs, one corner being turned and held back by a cluster of white orange blossoms.

"The wreath was of the immortal orange blossoms, and was very handsome, and over the entire costume was thrown a rich tulle veil, which hung in delicate folds over the wearer's graceful figure. She carried a handsome bouquet of orange blossoms, lilies, maidenhair fern and several other rare exotics, presented by Mrs. P. T. Johnson.

"Holding up the bride's train were two little beings, pretty, innocent and sweet enough to be of the world ethereal—they were little Miss Tottie Pinder and Miss J. Jeffrey, little glimpses of paradise . . ."

After reading all this, I would say that the Gay Nineties in Victoria were off to a very good start indeed.
